The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11683) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 16, 23, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 22, 25, 26, and 27; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 8, after the word "registry," in lines 2 and 3 of the bill, insert the following: "assistant superintendent of registry;" and on page 9, after the word "registry," in lines 2 and 3, insert the following: "assistant superintendent of registry;" and after the word "order," in line 3, insert the following: "assistant superintendent of money orders;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster-General may allow railway postal clerks whose duties require them to work six days or more per week fifty-two weeks per year an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay; and the sum of $31,000 is hereby appropriated for this purpose;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and after the word "dollars," at the end of the amended paragraph, insert the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow post-office inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on duty away from home or their designated domicile for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and may make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 19 and 20 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

M. S. QUAY,
W. B. ALLISON,
R. F. PETTIGREW,
E. F. LOUD,
GEORGE W. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be seen from this report that the matters in difference between the two Houses have been agreed to with the exception of the two amendments relating to special mail facilities. The House conferees refused to agree to that provision, and in view of the fact that those two amendments were inserted in the bill practically with unanimity in the Senate, of course the Senate conferees could not yield them. I withdraw the suggestion as to practical unanimity. It was done on a vote by yeas and nays, a large majority voting for the mail service and a respectable minority voting the other way.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is, the fast mail service?

Mr. ALLISON. The fast mail service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Iowa move that the Senate shall further insist on its amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will move that the Senate still further insist upon the two amendments and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate; and Mr. QUAY, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. PETTIGREW were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

A bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900; and

A bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

IMPERSONATION OF WEIGHMASTERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8626) to punish the impersonation of weighmasters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. KENNEY were appointed.

FREE ENTRY OF CERTAIN ARTICLES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7271) amending the act entitled "An act to allow the return, free of duty, of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes," approved May 18, 1896, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BURROWS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BURROWS, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut and Mr. CHILTON were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 146) to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind., with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

W. B. CARSWELL.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 150) for the relief of ex-Cadet Engineer W. B. Carswell.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object if the joint resolution does not lead to debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, William Beggs Carswell as a passed assistant engineer in the Navy, with relative rank of junior lieutenant, to take rank at the foot of his original class, next after Passed Assistant Engineer J. E. Palmer, Carswell having been honorably discharged from the Navy on June 9, 1883.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask that the message from the House of Representatives in relation to the public building at Indianapolis, Ind., may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 146) to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind.: which were, on page 4, line 4, to strike out "five" and insert "two;" and on page 4, after line 15, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. That in the event a site shall be purchased as provided for by section 1 of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to sell, for the highest and best bid obtainable after advertising said sale for at least twenty days immediately preceding in at least two daily papers published in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., and upon such terms of payment as said Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, the real estate now known as the Indianapolis, Ind., post-office site, comprising the real estate, with all buildings thereon situated, now owned and occupied by the United States Government, and located on Pennsylvania and Market streets, in the city of Indianapolis, Marion County, Ind. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to apply the proceeds derived from said sale toward the payment for the purchase of the site provided for in section 1 of this act; and the sum of $1,200,000 in this act authorized, together with the unexpended balance, if any, of the proceeds derived from the sale of the present site, may be expended in the construction of the building as provided for in section 1 of this act.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FAIRBANKS, Mr. WELLINGTON, and Mr. MANTLE were appointed.

GEORGE W. NEVINS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 1908, "An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Nevins," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment.

J. H. GALLINGER,
GEORGE L. SHOUP,
JOHN L. MITCHELL,
GEORGE W. RAY,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
C. H. CASTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

OLIVIA WORDEN.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2010) granting a pension to Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, United States Navy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6, after "Olivia," insert "T."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House numbered 2.
H. C. HANSBROUGH,
WM. E. CHANDLER,
JOHN L. MITCHELL,
GEORGE W. RAY,
E. S. HENRY,
EDMUND H. DRIGGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 5126) to authorize the St. Louis, Siloam and Southern Railroad Company, of Missouri and Arkansas, to construct a bridge across White River, in the State of Arkansas; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 231) providing for the further distribution of the compiled statutes of the District of Columbia.

BOWMAN ACT AND OTHER CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 4936) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 8, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes. It is a final report, and I will call it up later.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it a report of agreement?

Mr. TELLER. It is an agreement. I will call it up later.

BRANCH HOME AT CASTLE PINCKNEY.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5487) to establish a Branch Home of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Castle Pinckney, in Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, for the use of disabled officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to these requests for unanimous consent unless the bills proposed lead to debate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, of course, if that is the case I shall certainly withdraw the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, line 6, before the word "dollars," to fill the blank by inserting "one hundred thousand;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a Branch Home for the use of disabled officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army and Navy of the United States be, and is hereby, established at Castle Pinckney, in Charleston Harbor, and that $100,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the construction of suitable buildings and the improvement of the surrounding grounds.

SEC. 2. That the construction of the buildings and the equipment of the sanitarium shall be under the control of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE IZARD MIDDLETON.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 200) to authorize the appointment of George Izard Middleton an ensign in the Navy. Then I will be through. I have been very modest at this session. This is the first time I have asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "United States," to insert "subject to physical and professional examination;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, George Izard Middleton as an ensign in the Regular Navy of the United States, subject to physical and professional examination, to take rank at the foot of the ensigns in the Navy at the time of the passage of this resolution; Provided, That he shall not receive pay for the time while out of the naval service.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to insert the word "moral" after "physical."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. SMITH.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3190) granting an honorable discharge to John H. Smith.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "Infantry," to insert "as of date January 6, 1863;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the military record of John H. Smith, late private in Company F, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, and late private in Company B, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, be corrected, and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant him an honorable discharge from the said Company B, One hundred and twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as of date January 6, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POSTAGE ON LETTERS IN POINT PRINT.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill (S. 3283) regulating the postage on letters written by the blind is upon the Calendar, favorably reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The House has passed a similar bill. It is the same as the Senate bill, with simply the change of a word. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, with a view to substituting the House bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Kansas would prefer to have the House bill considered?

Mr. HARRIS. I should prefer that course, but I understand that the House bill is not upon the Calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I interrupt the Senator? Is this the bill pertaining to the transmission through the mails of rolls of raised letters for the blind?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It passed the committee unanimously, and the bill which has passed the House is almost identical.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is the House bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suppose it is on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clerks inform the Chair that it has not been reported from the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The House bill was to be reported back. I supposed the report had been made. It was left to another member of the committee. If it will meet the suggestion, I will report the bill now.

I am authorized by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4304) regulating the postage on letters written by the blind, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the bill just reported be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all letters written in point print or raised characters used by the blind when unsealed shall be transmitted through the mails as third-class matter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I will state to the Senator that the title, perhaps, is not exactly correct. It says, "letters written by the blind." I see that the bill inside is all right. "Written in characters used by the blind" should be the phrase rather than written by the blind, because that is not a proper phrase.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The phraseology of the bill has met the approval of the heads of all the institutions for the blind.

Mr. HOAR. I am not criticising the phraseology of the bill; I am criticising the title. I do not know whether it is worth while for the Senate to amend it. Let the Secretary read the bill again. It is only about three lines long.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. That is all right. I merely suggested that the title says "letters written by the blind," which is not true in fact, and it does not correspond with the text of the bill; that is all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It seems to me a letter indited with raised characters or otherwise is written, for all practical purposes. I confess myself I see no possible question of doubt about it.

Mr. HOAR. Who knows who wrote it?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Who wrote what?

Mr. HOAR. Who knows at the post-office who wrote the letter?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The post-office carries written matter at one price and printed matter at another. They do not know who wrote the letters.

Mr. HOAR. The title of this bill says that the letter so transmitted is to be written by the blind. In the first place, nobody knows who wrote it, if it be a correct description of it as writing. In the next place, it is not a correct description, because it is not a letter written when prepared in this mode. The draftsman of the bill thought just as I do, because inside of the bill there is a correct description of it. My suggestion is that the title shall conform to the bill. That is all there is of it. I do not say that I shall insist upon it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It strikes me that writing does not require the use of ink, and if a message is transmitted from one person to another by the physical use of some emblem upon paper or other material, by raised characters or otherwise, which conveys the idea intended to be conveyed by the act, it is written for all practical purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I will suggest also that it is matter unsealed, so that it is open to inspection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course, we would not know that a blind man wrote it, if that is the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts. But it is not to be supposed that a man who did not have to write in that way would use other than pen, ink, and paper. I suppose, however, that there might be fraud practiced upon the mails by a man who could see and who would use raised characters intended for the transmission of mail to the blind, but I can not conceive it as possible.

Mr. HOAR. Well, I do not insist on my point.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My only object is that I do not like to have the bill go back to the House with an amendment unless it is necessary.

Mr. HOAR. I will not make any discussion about it. It is not very important whether the title be correct or incorrect. I rather like to have ordinarily the acts of Congress exact in title.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The only trouble is about not having the bill go back.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not object further, if it is a matter of such earnest feeling.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; it is not that. I do not want the bill to go back to the House with an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will stand as reported.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the bill (S. 3283) regulating the postage on letters written by the blind be indefinitely postponed. The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTOR OF RUTH MARCH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2374) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate bond to Benjamin H. March, executor of the last will and testament of Ruth March, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It instructs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate bond in the name of Benjamin H. March, executor of the last will and testament of Ruth March, deceased, in lieu of a United States 4 per cent registered bond issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, numbered 68830, for $1,000, inscribed in the name of Ruth March, and alleged to have been lost or destroyed; but Benjamin H. March shall first file in the Treasury a bond in a penal sum in double the amount of the said missing bond and the interest which would accrue thereon until the principal thereof becomes due and payable, with two good and sufficient sureties, residents of the United States, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the lost or destroyed bonds.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HURLEY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4129) to correct the naval record of John Hurley.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records against John Hurley, late of the United States steamers Ohio and Lackawanna, and to grant him an honorable discharge; but no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TAMPA, FLA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 889) for the erection of a public building at Tampa, Fla., may be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, in line 12, on page 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in the same line, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" in line 9, on page 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in the same line, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" after the word "building," in line 10, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no money to be appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, to be approved by the Attorney-General, and until the State of Florida shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of the State and the service of any civil process therein.

In line 18, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" and in the same line, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide, a site for, and cause to be erected a suitable building, with proper fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, post-office, custom-house, and other Government offices, at the city of Tampa, Fla. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $500,000, nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum of $50,000 for site and building; and that the sum of $50,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended in the purchase of said site and toward the construction of said building: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys, around the same.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERNEST EDWARD WEST.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent to call up and put on its passage the joint resolution (S. R. 207) for the appointment of E. E. West in the regular establishment of the United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CLAY. The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and they reported a substitute for it, which they desire to have passed.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was, to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Ernest Edward West as a second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps, to take rank next to the junior second lieutenant now in said corps: Provided, That he shall not receive pay for the time while out of the naval service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to appoint E. E. West a second lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps."

WILLIAM A. HAMMOND.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 5069) to amend the act approved March 15, 1878, entitled "An act for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 8, after the word "repealed," to strike out "Provided, That" and insert "and;" in line 9, before the word "entitled," to strike out "and is hereby;" in the same line, before the word "pay," to insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "pay," to strike out "hereafter as Surgeon-General" and insert "of a brigadier-general;" in line 11, after the word "list," to strike out "but only;" in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out "beginning of the present fiscal year" and insert "date of the approval of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 2 of the act entitled "An act for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army," approved March 15, 1878, as provides that said Hammond shall not be entitled to pay while on the retired list of the Army be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the said Hammond shall be entitled to the pay of a brigadier-general of the Army on the retired list from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if there is a report accompanying that bill?

Mr. WARREN. There is a report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to hear the report read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. HAWLEY, February 17, 1899, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. WARREN. Unless the Senate desires the further reading of the report, I think we may dispense with it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to hear the report read through, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. Then I withdraw the request.

The reading of the report was resumed and concluded, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5069) to amend the act approved March 15, 1878, entitled "An act for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General of the Army," report back the bill with certain amendments, and recommend the passage of the same.

It appears that Dr. Hammond was dismissed from the service August 18, 1864, in accordance with the sentence of a general court-martial which found him guilty of certain offenses alleged to have been committed by him while Surgeon-General of the Army. He subsequently appealed to Congress for relief, and upon this appeal was passed the act approved March 15, 1878, which authorized the President to review the proceedings of the court-martial and to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court if, after such review, he should deem it right and proper to do so. The act further authorized the President, in the event that he should annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court, to place Dr. Hammond on the retired list of the Army as Surgeon-General, provided that the said Hammond should not, in virtue of such restoration to the Army, or of any provision of this act or any other act, be entitled to back, present, or future pay or allowances of any kind whatsoever.

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress quoted above, the President, after a review of the proceedings of the court-martial, and upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War, annulled and set aside the findings and sentence in the case of Dr. Hammond, and placed him on the retired list of the Army to date from August 27, 1879.

Since the date last named above, Dr. Hammond has been borne on the retired list of the Army, but has received no pay or allowances whatever from the Government. It is the object of the bill now pending for his relief to give him, for the future, the pay of a retired officer of his rank, which is that of a brigadier-general.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs having under consideration the bill which subsequently became the act of March 15, 1878, under which the President set aside the findings and sentence in the case of Dr. Hammond and placed him upon the retired list, made an exhaustive report (Senate Report No. 102, Forty-fifth Congress, second session), which fully sets forth the history of the case and the grounds upon which the committee recommended the passage of the bill. For present purposes it is believed to be sufficient to make the following quotation from that report:

"Let Dr. Hammond, in event he shall satisfy the President of his right thereto, be restored to his family, his friends, and his profession, freed from every taint or blemish which has hitherto been inflicted upon him under fortuitous circumstances. His brethren in the medical profession honor his name and fame, and his countrymen look upon him with pride as foremost in the ranks of American scientists, humanitarians, and gentlemen. Your committee believes this to be a case wherein the constitutional prerogative of Congress to redress grievances may be safely, justly, and fairly exercised, especially since the President is invested, by the provisions of the bill, with wise discretion. If he find against the merits and equities of the case, then the relief sought must be denied. If he find otherwise and hence favorably, Dr. Hammond will then receive that reparation to which he is entitled, and which avoids, by the terms of the bill, all reflection and humiliation upon any other party concerned."

Dr. Hammond did satisfy the President that he was entitled to be restored to a status of honor, and he was so restored; but although his name has been borne upon the retired list of the Army for nearly twenty years, and although he has been entitled during all of that period to bear the title and wear the uniform of his rank, he could not receive any portion of the retired pay of his grade because of the prohibitory proviso in the act of March 15, 1878. It seems to your committee that if it was just and right that Dr. Hammond should be restored to the Army and placed upon the retired list, it was equally just and right that he should receive the pay allowed by law to other retired officers of his grade.

However, the pending bill does not propose and your committee does not recommend that any payment shall be made to him for the many years which have elapsed since he was placed upon the retired list. The bill, if enacted into a law, will simply give him for the future the same right as to pay as is enjoyed by all other officers on the retired list. This is a right which in the natural order of things he can only enjoy for a comparatively few years at most, and it seems to your committee to be one which in fairness and justice should be accorded to him. It is accordingly recommended that the bill as amended be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not propose to object to any bill that is reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, as I am not especially versed in military matters, but I do want to enter my protest against the remarkable tribute that is paid to Dr. Hammond in this report in connection with his professional standing. I do not care to go into detail on this subject, but I want to say that the man who has been at the head of a company that has been imposing upon the people of this country the trash that Dr. Hammond has been imposing upon them, under the name of science, does not deserve in any report made to Congress a tribute as to his professional standing.

While, as I said at the beginning, I shall not object to the passage of this bill if the older members of the Senate and the Committee on Military Affairs think Dr. Hammond shall at this late day have restored to him the emoluments of the office that he once held, I want, nevertheless, to put on record my protest against the fulsome tribute that is contained in this report in regard to his present professional standing and his relation to the medical profession at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. SMITHMEYER AND PAUL J. PELZ.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3901) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who objected to the bill the other evening, authorizes me to state that he withdraws his objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think this bill ought to go over. I do not know its provisions, but I understand the object is to give additional pay to Mr. Smithmeyer. I think he has been very well paid for the services he has rendered, and I should like to say a word or two upon that subject when the bill comes up.

Mr. STEWART. I am prepared to discuss it whenever we shall have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to say a word or two about it.

Mr. STEWART. Then the bill goes over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from New York?

Mr. ALLISON. This bill will undoubtedly lead to debate. I do not know the nature of it exactly, but I think it must lead to some discussion.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I do not think it will.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New York to withhold his request for a moment. I should like to look at the bill at least. It contains an appropriation, as I understand.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It contains an appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. Then let it lie over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING NAVAL CADETS.

Mr. MCENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 234) to authorize the President to appoint to the Naval Academy acting naval cadets who served during the war with Spain.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the President to appoint as cadets to the Naval Academy the acting cadets, temporarily appointed during the late war with Spain, who served with credit during said war, to be shown by the recommendation of the commanding officer of the ship in which they served; the cadets so appointed, before admission to the Naval Academy, must be under 21 years of age, and must pass the examination now required of cadets for admission to the Academy.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT FLOWER.

Mr. QUAY. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. PENROSE], who is necessarily absent, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7632) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Robert Flower.

Be it enacted, etc., That Lieut. Horace P. McIntosh, of the United States Navy, be placed on the retired list of the Navy at a salary equal to 75 per cent of the sea pay of his grade at the time of his retirement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the bill be read as amended.

The Secretary read the bill as amended.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there a committee report from the Committee on Naval Affairs?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is; Report No. 1618. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that this is a case where the officer hoped to get back on the active list. The committee decided not to recommend him for return to the active list, but to allow him to go upon the retired list in the way that almost all the other officers of the Navy are upon the retired list, with three-quarters of his sea pay. The bill has been changed in that way, and therefore it met with a favorable report from the committee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORPORATION LAWS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5291) to put in force in the Indian Territory certain provisions of the laws of Arkansas relating to corporations, and to make said provisions applicable to said Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will not ask that that bill be considered at the present time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is only a page. It is a very brief bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed. I do not think it will lead to any discussion.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think not, and it is quite important.

Mr. ALLISON. I will allow the Senator from South Dakota to have the bill called up for consideration if there is no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PORTRAIT OF POCAHONTAS.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I desire to engage the attention of the Senate for a few moments that I may discharge a task of courtesy and of duty that has been too long, though unavoidably, delayed.

Some time since I received a letter from Henry S. Wellcome, esq., an American citizen, a native of Indiana, now residing in England, near London, in which he requests me to present to the Senate in his behalf an oil-painted portrait of the Indian princess, Pocahontas, whose name is romantically connected with our early history and whose gentle character has preserved it in sweet memory.

Mr. Wellcome is a public-spirited citizen, who has carried American enterprise to the motherland, where he is a distinguished and successful chemist and druggist. He was one of the organizers of the American Society in London, and was its president for several years; and generally he is the chairman of the committee which has charge of the Thanksgiving Day dinner and the Fourth of July celebration participated in by the American residents of that great metropolis. Well known and respected in both countries, he is a generous patron of art, science, and letters; and he is a patriot alive to all that interests his native land, his enthusiasm being such that he keeps the Stars and Stripes continually flying over his office and factory.

He has taken deep interest in our early history and in the fate of the Indian race. A notable instance of his gracious disposition has been shown in the removal, through his agency and influence, of the Metla Kahla Indians from British Columbia into the confines of the United States, where, as he thought, they could find more congenial laws and associations.

The picture of Pocahontas is a fine copy of a painting which hangs at Booton Hall, in Norfolk, England, the former seat of the Rolfe family. The original is from the brush of De Passe, an eminent artist of the sixteenth and early part of the seventeenth centuries. Upon the canvas of the original are painted these words:

Matoaka Rebecka, filia potentis Princ: Powhatan Imp. Virginia.

On the space below:

Motoake, alias Rebecka, daughter of the mighty Prince Powhatan, Emperor of Attanough Komouck, of Virginia; a Christian converted and married to the worshipful Mr. Thomas Rolfe. Aged 21, 1616.

There was a superstition amongst the Indians that concealed the true name, and Matoaka was the real Indian name of the princess, though they called her Pocahontas.

Within a few years, Mr. President, we will celebrate, and doubtless with fitting honors, the three hundredth anniversary of the planting of the first durable colony of the English-speaking race in the New World. This occurred at Jamestown, in Virginia, on the 13th day of May, 1607.

They came none too soon. While Cabot had roved the Northern seas and claimed the American continent in the name of England in 1497, nothing had been done to effectuate his title, and now more than a century had gone by. Meantime the Spaniards under Ponce de Leon had possessed themselves of Florida, Cortez had conquered Mexico, Pizarro had laid Peru at his feet, and De Soto had passed across the land to the Mississippi. Meantime also the French were establishing themselves in Canada, and little scope was left for English enterprise unless they took advantage of the fugitive occasion, as Jefferson afterwards did, in acquiring Louisiana.

Three little ships of 20, 40, and 100 tons burden, respectively, bearing the names of The Discovery, Good Speed, and Susan Constant, under the command of Capt. Christopher Newport, had sailed down the Thames on the 19th of December, 1606, with the design of renewing the effort, which had previously failed, to establish a colony at Roanoke, in what is now North Carolina. Prayers were said in the churches as they went forth on their perilous enterprise, and the poet Drayton wuffed them "bon voyage" in inspiring verses, one of which runs:

You brave, heroic minds,
Worthy your country's name,
That honor still pursue,
Whilst loitering hinds
Lurk here at home with shame,
Go and subdue.

They went and they subdued. A violent storm, however, Mr. President, drove the ships into the mouth of the Chesapeake River, where they first touched land at a place which they named Point Comfort. They then proceeded on their way up the James River, and on the 13th day of May, 1607, the first feet that came to stay landed at Jamestown.

Capt. John Smith, knight errant, soldier, sailor, and adventurer, was the leading spirit of this colony, and of it he soon became the president. For three years, by his courage, wisdom, and mastery of men, he rescued and preserved it from many trials, difficulties, and dangers. To him belongs the name of founder.

While the land was fertile and beautiful enough and its lower shores were covered with flowers of diverse colors and goodly trees, with fish in the streams and game in the forests, danger lurked in every thicket. The flight of arrows from Indian bows in the tall grass was the salute with which the newcomers were received in a wilderness of which the great Indian King Powhatan was Emperor, having in the tribe 8,000, with 2,400 warriors.

A year passed by, and complaints came that little had been accomplished. Fever and hunger had decimated the colony, and there were discontents at home. The royal order was to go in search of the South Sea, and so, with a small party, John Smith, on a bleak December day in 1607, embarked in a barge up the Chickahominy River to find it. Ascending to the shallows, he procured a canoe and some Indian guides, and with only two companions he ascended farther until he reached and landed at a point in the White Oak Swamp east of Richmond, to which he gave the name of Rassawek.

He did not find the South Sea, but here he did find a band of Indians who captured him. He was taken before their chief, Opechancanough, brother to the Emperor Powhatan, and was thence taken to Werokomoko, the chief place of council of Powhatan, in what is now Gloucester County, at a site on the north bank of the York River, not far from Yorktown.

Wrapped in a robe of coon skins sat the tall, gaunt, sour old Indian Emperor, and Smith, who had slain two of his Indian assailants in the fight on the Chickahominy, was condemned to die.

Two stones were brought forth before Powhatan, and Smith was dragged to them, his head forced down upon one of them, and clubs were raised to beat out his brains, when, lo, an Indian girl of 12 or 13 years of age rushed upon the scene, caught his head in her arms and laid her own upon his to save him from death. The sour old King relented and Smith was saved, for the intercessor was Powhatan's favorite daughter, Pocahontas.

Many times during the struggles of this little colony on the James did she again attest her generous and gracious character. Once when they were starving she had suddenly appeared, bearing corn to their relief; and again when they were about to be assailed and massacred she gave the timely and sufficient note of warning.

A few years rolled by; the fortunes of war became changed. In 1612 Pocahontas was taken prisoner by that rover of land and sea, Capt. Samuel Argall, who had three years before brought the message deposing Smith from command. She was brought a disconsolate and weeping captive to Jamestown. There she seemed lovely in the eyes of Master John Rolfe, sometimes called Thomas, one of the colonists, and his attachment was reciprocated. But Rolfe was sorely troubled in spirit. The scripture forbade the marrying of strange wives and their mutual love caused a "mighty warfare in his meditations."

But, like most colonists, the duty of Christianizing the heathen would seem from his own account to have been the moving impulse to his soul, for he reflected upon the question whether it was not his solemn duty to marry and convert "this heathen creature Pocahontas."

As the historian relates, "What most touched and decided him was her desire to be taught and instructed in the knowledge of God, her capabilities of understanding, her aptness and willingness to receive any good impression, and also 'the spiritual beside her own incitements stirring me up thereto;' and so, according to the true poetic justice of romance, at the age of 18 the lovely Indian maiden was married to John Rolfe in the old church at Jamestown, and she was given the Christian name of Rebecca.

Three years later Rolfe carried his bride to London, where she was treated as the daughter of a king and where her arrival created a great sensation. In her native forests she was dressed in doeskin lined with down from the wood pigeon's breast; anklets and bracelets of coral were her adornments, with a white plume, the badge of royalty, floating over her hair. Now she shone in all the splendors of court apparel.

She was the first lady of the New World to appear in the home country. She was presented at court by Lady Delaware and most "graciously used" by the King and Queen. The Bishop of London, delighted at her conversion to Christianity, gave a great entertainment in her honor; and for a time Pocahontas was all the fashion in the brilliant revels of the great metropolis.

She died suddenly at Gravesend in March, 1617, at the age of 22, when about to return to Virginia, making, as we are told, "a godly end," and being buried in the parish church, where her name was carelessly registered as Rebecca Wrothe. The church was afterwards burned, and in its ashes disappeared the earthly relics of Pocahontas.

From her marriage with John Rolfe was born one son, Thomas Rolfe, who was brought up in London; but he came to Virginia and was known as Lieutenant Rolfe, commanding Fort James, on the Chickahominy. He married a young lady in England, whom he brought to the New World, and there he became a gentleman of note and fortune.

The only daughter of Lieutenant Rolfe was married to Col. Robert Bolling, of a family widely connected and much respected in Virginia. As Stith says in his history, "This remnant of the imperial family of Virginia, which long ran in a single person, is now increased and branched out into a very numerous progeny."

Amongst the descendants of Pocahontas was that rare genius, John Randolph of Roanoke, once a Representative in Congress, a Senator in this body, and the minister of the United States at the court of Russia. I note, Mr. President, that a morning journal, in the notice of the presentation of this picture, accords to me descent from the Indian princess, but no such honor is mine.

The character and the worthy services of Pocahontas are fully attested and were appreciated and cherished by the colonists. They were much touched by "the love of Pocahontas," who "ever once in four or five days brought food which saved many of their lives that else for all this had starved of hunger," and they called her the "dear and blessed Pocahontas." Capt. John Smith said of her "as for features, countenance, and expression, she much exceeded any of the rest," and in his letter presenting and commending her to Queen Anne he declared that—

During the time of two or three years she, next under God, was still the instrument to preserve this colony from death, famine, and utter confusion, which if in those days had once been dissolved, Virginia might have been as it was at our first arrival to this day.

Upon slender threads often hang the momentous events of history. John Fiske, the historian, in his book Virginia and Her Neighbors, speaks of Pocahontas as "one of the noblest and loveliest characters in American history," and asserts that "the rescue of Smith by her was an event of real historic importance. Without it the subsequent relations of the Indians and the English colonists become incomprehensible." And he adds the significant words that "but for her friendly service on more than one occasion the tiny settlement would probably have perished."

The charm of romance will ever hang over the story of Pocahontas; and that flower of the wilderness will ever shed its brightness and its fragrance over the rude, somber, and cruel scenes of our people's earliest struggles to get a foothold in the land whose inhabitants are now as the stars of heaven, the leaves of the trees, and the sands of the sea. But far beyond this, it should not be forgotten that she was indeed the guardian spirit of the great founder-captain, John Smith, and his feeble company; and who knows but for her what had been the New World's destiny?

It is meet that her portrait should hang here in remembrance of her lovely character and her pious deeds; and the myriads that gaze upon it wondering whence came the gentle spirit that dwelt in the savage breast will be minded also that all men are brethren, and that even in the dark shadows of the forest primeval there may shine a light from heaven, and there be found—

A spark of that immortal fire
By angels shared, by Allah given,
To lift from earth our low desire.

I present this portrait to the Senate, Mr. President, in the name of Mr. Henry S. Wellcome, an American citizen residing near London.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I had not the pleasure of hearing the first part of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but I have heard enough of his speech to learn that the portrait presented to the Senate is presented by a gentleman whom I have the pleasure of claiming as a very warm personal friend—Henry S. Wellcome. He is an American citizen in the fullest sense of the word, notwithstanding that he has been living in the city of London for a number of years. I know him to be a gentleman of the very highest character, of a very generous and kindly nature, and one who has taken very large interest in the welfare of the Indian race in the United States.

My recollection is that he published a volume, after having much to do in caring for a tribe of Indians in Alaska. He wrote a book, which is a very interesting one, and a copy of which I have in my library.

I only rose, however, for the purpose of testifying to the very high character and distinguished qualities of manhood possessed by that gentleman. I think it is a very graceful thing on his part to present the portrait of Pocahontas, which the Senator from Virginia has spoken of so eloquently to-day, and I hope the Senate will accept it by the adoption of a resolution.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the Committee on the Library have every reason to believe, and have assurances, in fact, from those in a position to know, that the picture of Pocahontas which is to-day presented to the Senate is a genuine work of art. Of course, we all know that it has great historical value. On behalf of the Committee on the Library I present the following resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the Senate be, and it is hereby, authorized to accept the painting, a portrait of Pocahontas, donated by Henry S. Wellcome, esq., to the Senate, and to have the painting suitably placed in the Senate wing of the Capitol, and the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to the donor.

CITY AND SUBURBAN RAILWAY.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (S. R. 139) to promote the relocation of certain tracks of the City and Suburban Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted as a proviso insert the following:

"Providing, upon completion by said City and Suburban Railway of the underground construction hereinbefore provided for, the obligation of the said City and Suburban Railway imposed by section 2 of the act approved June 27, 1898, in respect to the construction of its line on North Capitol street north of T street, shall cease, and in lieu of that provision said City and Suburban Railway is required, within six months after North Capitol street shall have been graded, to construct and operate a double-track railway on North Capitol street from T street to Michigan avenue, thence on Michigan avenue east, to connect with its present tracks on Bunker Hill road. "Said railway on North Capitol street north of T street and on Michigan avenue is to be operated by the overhead trolley system, but the right to operate an overhead trolley on North Capitol street shall cease and determine on July 1, 1904, or whenever after that date the said street shall be paved; and the said company shall, on and after said date or paving as aforesaid, operate the said portion of its line by the underground electric system."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
CHARLES J. FAULKNER,
J. W. BABCOCK,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

WILLIAM MOORE.

Mr. CHILTON. There is a little bill on the Calendar which will take but a moment. It is House bill 11615.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11615) removing the charge of desertion from the record of William Moore, Company I, Twenty-third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should like to know if there is a report in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No report accompanies the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. The House committee made a report, but there is no report by the Senate committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELOS M. KENYON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12013) to increase the pension of Delos M. Kenyon, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon. As it is a very urgent case and a House bill, I ask unanimous consent that it be put on its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. After this bill is disposed of I shall ask for the regular order.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Delos M. Kenyon, late first lieutenant Company D, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT FOR HAWAII.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that to-morrow morning I shall ask leave to call up for consideration the bill (S. 4893) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, and if I may do so, I shall make some remarks in the outset.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the pending amendment is the one proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. If he will withhold that for a moment, I should like to present an amendment on behalf of the committee.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 12, after line 3, I move to insert:
Burrows Island light and fog signal station, Washington: To establish a light and fog signal station at Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, Washington, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the pending amendment disposed of—the one I offered last evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will withhold his amendment for a moment. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has heretofore submitted an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

That all persons who may have heretofore, or may hereafter, settle upon that portion of the Great Sioux Indian Reservation which was opened up to settlement under and by virtue of the act of March 2, 1889, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes," may secure patents for the lands embraced in their entry upon making the payments required in section 21 of said act of March 2, 1889, above referred to, and no other or further payment shall be required of said claimants, whether proof and payment be made after fourteen months or five years from the date of settlement upon said land.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to strike out of the amendment, on the first line, the words "or may hereafter;" so as to read "all persons who may have heretofore settled upon."

Mr. FRYE. The Senator wants to change the word "settle" to "settled."

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes; I strike out the words "or may hereafter," and change the word "settle;" so as to read:

That all persons who may have heretofore settled upon that portion of the Great Sioux Indian Reservation, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. SULLIVAN. After line 25 on page 5 I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to purchase Wilson Park for the exclusive use of the insane soldiers and sailors in the Government Hospital for the Insane.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, a bill has been introduced in the House to increase the facilities for those who are unfortunately insane, whether they be of the class known as the criminal insane or otherwise. The same bill was introduced by myself here and later the amendment was offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I have now proposed.

An investigation shows that there are nearly 2,000 inmates within the grounds known as St. Elizabeth's Asylum. The inmates there are composed of three classes—the insane soldiers and sailors, the insane criminal class, and the insane who are not white people; in other words, colored people.

The superintendent of that institution, Dr. Godding, some time since requested me to visit him and to look into the condition of affairs there with the view of presenting the very bill which I introduced. I was astonished to find the fact to be that there is no asylum throughout the United States, for the insane, under the control of the United States, except this one. I was astonished to find, also, that not only the insane soldiers and sailors who are not provided for are put in this asylum (and when I say not provided for, I mean not provided for by their own friends and kindred), but there are in the insane asylum criminals drawn from every prison, no matter where the prison may be, throughout the United States, who happen to be insane.

At the present time you have there colored inmates, persons who in my section of the country are understood and known as negroes; and you have there insane criminals and insane soldiers and sailors. To say that such a thing as this would not be tolerated in the section from which I come is absolutely unnecessary.

When my attention has been called to the fact that there is this kind of a mixture there, I can only respond to the natural impulse that exists not only in my own heart, but in the heart of every man when this statement is made. We have there absolutely to-day not only the insane soldiers and sailors, but insane criminals and insane negroes dumped into one common pile. Not only is that true, but it is absolutely true further that there are probably one hundred or more than a hundred of those people who are to-day without beds to sleep on.

A short time ago the superintendent of that institution asked for an appropriation of some $32,000, the purpose being to relieve the people who are there and who are not provided for; who are not properly taken care of, and yet who are insane and who are poor; who are charges of the United States in the strictest sense of the word, and yet who are neglected most shamefully by reason of the fact that no provision is made for them. Yet the appropriation was not made; ample provision was not made; reasonable provision was not made.

The question therefore now comes whether the bill that was introduced in the House some time ago and introduced here in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall be passed, or whether the amendment to this sundry civil appropriation bill that has also been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and reported favorably shall be attached to and made a part of the pending bill. The question is whether when our sons and our brothers and our kindred go out to war at Santiago, or San Juan, or the Philippines, or anywhere else, and they are stricken with some fever that bereaves them of their minds, they shall be brought back and dumped into one common pile, into one single asylum with thieves, with murderers, and with every other class of criminals who may find their way from the prisons of the United States.

Not only is that true, but, as I said a moment ago, another class of people, the colored population, is dumped in there also.

I shall ask, in connection with the reading of the bill which has been introduced, that the report which was made by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall be read. I ask first that the bill be read, and then the report, because they are in line with the amendment I have offered.

The Secretary read the bill, introduced by Mr. SULLIVAN February 17, 1899, as follows:

A bill (S. 5325) to purchase Wilson Park as an addition to St. Elizabeth Asylum, for the use of the insane soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $245,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of Wilson Park, in the District of Columbia, as an addition to the grounds of St. Elizabeth Asylum, to be used for the insane soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make said purchase.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. QUAY February 20, 1899, as follows:

[Report to accompany S. 5325.]

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 5325, beg leave to report:

Your committee find that our unfortunate heroes of Santiago, Manila, San Juan Hill, as well as those of other wars, who have lost their sanity in the discharge of their patriotic duty to their country, are thrust in the asylum among thieves, counterfeiters, murderers, and all other insane criminals at St. Elizabeth Asylum, there being no other place to receive them. To say that this is a dishonor to our country and a stain upon the fair record of our Government is but speaking a plain truth. That it is so is the result of a lack of knowledge on the part of Congress. The fact being now brought to the attention of Congress, we are assured that this demoralizing outrage will be speedily remedied.

Dr. Godding, the most excellent and efficient superintendent of the asylum, states that the proposed addition is a necessity of the most urgent character. We recommend the prompt passage of Senate bill No. 5325, that proper care may be taken of these of our unfortunate soldiers and sailors who have given to their country more than life or treasure.

Wilson Park consists of Pencotes Heights, consisting of 295 lots, and lots 18 and 17 adjoining the southern line of the above-described subdivision of land, containing 69.39 acres, and all containing a total of 4,594,404 square feet of ground, which, at 10 cents per square foot, amounts to $459,440. Lots sold at 10 cents per square foot before building of railroad.

Over 100 lots adjoining this property were sold at 10 cents to 15 cents per square foot. Since building of railroad, building of schoolhouse, and lighting of streets lots are now being sold at 25 cents per square foot, which would raise the value of the property to $1,148,600.

Wilson Park adjoins the present grounds of the United States Hospital for the Insane, and, as stated by Dr. Godding, is the only available tract of land suitable for the extension of the hospital grounds for building purposes.

The entire park is covered with a magnificent growth of large oak trees, which the extension of the city streets in the spring will destroy; and excavations in grading streets will disfigure the property for the proposed hospital grounds; besides, the park is located upon a high, beautiful site, with a commanding view of the Potomac River and the city of Washington.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Washington, D. C., February 14, 1899.

MY DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to a bill recently introduced in the House of Representatives authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase a tract of land adjoining the present hospital site, so as to afford a distinct provision for the insane of the Army and Navy, with grounds apart from the United States convict and District indigent insane.

"It is a consummation devoutly to be wished," and knowing your interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of our sailor boys, I venture to ask you to look into the matter, hoping it may have your approval and support.

The act of 1882 authorizing the Attorney-General to transfer to this hospital, through the Secretary of the Interior, all insane persons charged with offenses against the United States or convicts serving sentence in State prison or penitentiary has resulted in a steady increase in this undesirable class of patients, until at the close of the last fiscal year no less than 109 of these were provided for at St. Elizabeth, the same hospital that cares for the insane of the Army and Navy.

Lately our noble sailors have been carrying the flag round the world. The heroes of Manila and Santiago, brave as lions, stricken with fever and bereft of reason, are brought home for our nursing and loving care. They have not held their lives dear; yea, have freely given more than their lives for their country. Shall we not give them the best of hospital surroundings and a pleasant home, free from association with felons and criminal insane? Is not the country generous enough and just enough to do this?

The land in question is most desirable; it is a beautiful spot, elevated, commanding views of the city and river, and is in every way suitable for extensive buildings and ornamental grounds. No movement has ever been made by the hospital authorities to secure it, simply because it was considered impossible to purchase the property. There is no adjoining land that can compare with it or that would be in any way adequate for the purpose.

I feel sure that no one will do more to relieve our sailors and soldiers from needless humiliation than the kind-hearted and patriotic former Secretary of the Navy.

Very respectfully,

W. W. GODDING,
Superintendent.

HON. WILLIAM E. CHANDLER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, I have been out on this ground and examined it, and I have also examined the grounds which are proposed to be incorporated, or which are suggested as an addition to the grounds of the asylum. It will be apparent to anyone who will go through and look for even a moment that it is not only necessary to have some place to confine persons who are insane, but it is also necessary to have some place to give them employment—something for them to do that their minds may eventually be made clear, and that they may be relieved and restored. There must be some occupation—something for them to do to relieve them from the monotony of staying within doors, within the walls of the house.

Mr. SPOONER. How much land is there now appurtenant to the asylum owned by the Government?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should judge that there is within the walls of the inclosure something like 100 acres. That is a mere estimate of mine. I have an exact statement of the number of acres and the number of inmates in the asylum.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator say 100 acres?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should judge there are a hundred acres within the inclosure.

Mr. SPOONER. Why is it necessary, then, to buy additional ground?

Mr. SULLIVAN. That ground is not used for the purpose which appears to be necessary. The bulk of the property is not around the asylum, but away down in Maryland somewhere. They have a little tidbit of land; I think they call it 40 acres. That is on the east side of the road or street running through Congress Heights, some half a mile beyond the asylum grounds proper.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the extent of the asylum grounds proper?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I should say, as I said before, something in the neighborhood of 100 acres. It appears so to me, when I look at it, just walking over the grounds. The grounds and buildings within the walls, I should say, embrace from 75 to 100 acres. I should imagine they would amount to that much; but that does not cover what appears to me to be the necessary thing to do here. They do not want simply the ground to put a building on. You might put a dozen buildings upon a single acre; you might put a hundred buildings upon the ground that is there; but you need something different, something other, something more than that for the single and simple reason that it does not do to put people who are crazy in a building, shut them up, and give them no opportunity to get out in the sunlight or give them no kind of employment.

Mr. SPOONER. I have been told that there are, in fact, 350 acres belonging to the asylum.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Perhaps the committee may be able to find the paper. I do not know anything about that; but that paper shows exactly the number of acres. I have gone and walked the ground over, but I can not recall the number of acres. I only say the amount they have there within the walls is said to be 40 acres. I should judge it to be from 25 to 30 acres. That is a farm or market garden, and in that farm or market garden those people are permitted to work and labor, and there they find rest and recreation in that kind of mental diversion while manually they labor.

It appears to a casual observer that the only ground adjacent or near the present asylum grounds is that lying along the Potomac River southward. That ground embraces about 115 or 120 acres, known as Wilson Park and the adjacent property. It is not only high and dry and fertile, but desirable, as it overlooks the river Potomac and overlooks the city of Washington. It is not low and marshy, while a great part of the land now owned by the Government for the benefit of the insane asylum is low and marshy, unfit for habitation and unfit for cultivation—absolutely worthless, except, perhaps, to raise frogs and turtles, or things of that kind—and surely not a fit abiding place for any person who is in that state of mind which requires treatment in an insane asylum.

The only questions that now confront us are these: Is it necessary to add more ground? Is it necessary to separate the insane criminal from the insane soldier and sailor? Is it necessary to separate the African race from the white race? So far as I am concerned, my judgment is that all three of these divisions should be made; so far as I am concerned, I believe in a separation of the criminal class from the other class and of the African race from the other race. I find, however, that there all these things are blended.

In this connection, to let the Senator who asked me a question just now understand exactly what the situation is, I will ask that the report of the superintendent of the asylum, which I send to the desk, be read, beginning at page 17, from which it will be seen not only exactly the number of acres connected with the asylum, but the present condition of the asylum property and the condition of the inmates of that institution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Mississippi how much of the report he desires to have read?

Mr. SULLIVAN. The first five pages, beginning on page 17.

The Secretary read as follows:

A word about St. Elizabeth, whose idealized head by the German artist, W. von Miller, makes a fitting frontispiece to the report. Why is the Government Hospital for the Insane called St. Elizabeth? Briefly, it takes its name from that of the original grant of its land to the first Catholic settler of Maryland. The 400 acres which constitute the present hospital site are about a fourth part of the St. Elizabeth grant of colonial times. The names of saints are household words throughout Maryland. St. Clements, St. George, St. Mary, all testify to that early nomenclature. During the war of the rebellion the army hospital for the sick and wounded on these grounds was known as St. Elizabeth. It was discontinued in 1864, for its urgent need was over, but it had for all time given a pleasant name to the place, hiding the insanity in the title behind the mantle of a saint.

As the thirteenth century recedes the story of St. Elizabeth of Hungary comes more and more to symbolize the Divine Healer of the poor and the outcast to the hearts of men. The legends which, coming out of that twilight century, cluster around that woman's life, who passed at the age of 21 from penance and seeming madness to the aureole and the life beyond, are redolent with the compassion that is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities." The mantle torn off that the beggar might be clothed; the leaves for the poor hidden in her vest, that, rudely torn aside, disclosed a lap of roses; the washing of the beggars' feet, that gave a theme and immortal fame to Murillo; the leprous child laid upon her own bed, and when they looked the Christ Child was in its stead—what fillet saint, what better name, than St. Elizabeth to symbolize the loving kindness that should be extended here?

No better evidence than these tables is needed to show that the United States have entered on an era of expansion. The whole number under treatment, 2,294, is nearly 100 more than that of any previous year, while the number of admissions, 437, has been exceeded only during the closing years of the civil war. The increase of the Army to a quarter of a million of men and the rapid development of the Navy since war was declared against Spain in April last explains this. Although peace is now in sight, this increase in the number of hospital inmates, out of proportion to the increment of recent years, will continue, since a considerable increase in the Army will be permanent.

Moreover, the law as it now stands provides for the admission here of "indigent insane persons who have become insane within three years after their discharge from the service from causes which arose during and were produced by said service." In the period from the 21st of April to the 12th of August, 1898, the time covered by the war, 46 insane persons were admitted from the active lists of the Army and Navy, one-half of whom were from the Volunteer Army. This is against 15 received from the same source during the same period of the year 1897. An increase of admissions from this source alone of not less than 50 a year must be expected and provided for.

The daily average number of inmates during the year has been 1,798, an increase of 83 on that of the preceding year. The whole number of deaths, 137, amounts to 8.94 per cent of the whole number under treatment, which is more than 1.5 per cent above that of the previous year. This is due to the advancing age and incident infirmity of a majority of the inmates rather than to any prevailing disease, for while there has been more than a sufficiency of malarial poisoning, it has not resulted in the all-pervading sickness of some previous years.

Congress has ordered a survey of the Anacostia flats, looking to their reclamation in the near future; and, as a medicine prescribed sometimes has a salutary effect before it is taken, it may be that the hope of success thus held out has imparted vigor to the sufferers to withstand the attack of the paludinous microbe. It is to be hoped that the good work may now progress, without interruption, to the transformation of these noisome flats into hygienic pleasure grounds for the nation's capital. If it was the boast of Augustus that "he had found Rome brick and left it marble," may it be said of the legislation of this decade that, finding Washington a miasmatic marsh, it has left it a city of salubrious homes. Such achievement would be worthy of the era of empire on which we appear to be entering.

Extensive building operations have been carried on during the year. We are at last to have, in the new laundry, whose walls are now in process of erection and whose plans have been a matter of careful study, a building which it is believed will be found ample for the important and growing work of this department.

The Dix Building No. 3, which has been completed and occupied during the year, is cheerful and pleasant, both without and within, and seems well suited for the class for which it is specially designed.

The extension to the West Lodge for colored males, for which a small appropriation was made at the close of the fiscal year 1898, is already well under way, the urgent need for further accommodations for this class requiring that the work be pushed without delay. It will afford the greatest relief.

The Allison buildings for infirm soldiers and sailors from the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are practically completed and will be fully occupied before the report is issued. This is a group of four buildings of the pavilion type, connected with the Relief and Home buildings, affording an indoor and outdoor provision for the sick and feeble ones (who by their advancing age are every year becoming more helpless) that is more liberal and inviting than anything that has hitherto been developed at St. Elizabeth. There is ample indoor space for 100 bedridden and feeble men, while the piazza space is actually greater than that within doors. The floors of the latter are of the same level as the dormitory floors, and the doorways wide enough to admit of the beds and couches on casters being trundled into the open air.

This, for more than half the year in our climate, is a perfect luxury of shaded coolness and free ventilation. The poor veteran who, bedridden, has turned his face to the wall only to "babble a of green fields" that he no longer sees, wheeled out on these piazzas may again associate with the trees, look into their green leaves, and, lying in the morning's light, drink in its reviving breeze. A little glazing may transform these same spaces into winter sun baths to rival Algeria's house-tops for invalids. When outdoors means Heaven to the bedridden sufferer, why shut him out of it? These very satisfactory buildings for 100 inmates, with all their liberal provisions, will be completed and furnished with the appropriation.

The commitment of insane persons from the District of Columbia to the Government Hospital for the Insane was for many years under the orderly proceedings laid down in United States Revised Statutes, sections 4844, 4845, and 4846, which proceedings were undoubtedly intended by the Congress which enacted those provisions to be all that was necessary to determine the insanity and provide for the care of the unfortunate sufferer. The supreme court of the District of Columbia, in their decision in re Bryant (3 Mackey Rep. 489) changed all this. Bryant was an insane man admitted under sections 4853 and 4854, but the decision was afterwards held to apply to those admitted under sections 4844, 4845, and 4846. Mr. Justice James, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"In our opinion, this whole matter is regulated by the Maryland statute of 1785, chapter 27, section 6, which contemplates that the person whose affairs the chancellor is to have control of shall be found insane by a jury of inquiry. There must be a regular adjudication of the question by due process of law, without which even the chancellor can not act, and due process of law in establishing the insanity of a person has long been declared to be by inquiry through a jury."

"We hold, therefore, first that these sections of the Revised Statutes do not contemplate compulsory seclusion in this institution without due process of law. They only open its doors to those who have been properly found to be insane persons. If they meant anything else, they would be unconstitutional."

"And secondly, we hold that the whole matter of the care of insane persons is regulated by the act of Maryland of 1785, which includes this proceeding of an inquiry by jury."

Following this judicial decision the mode of procedure has been changed, and residents of the District of Columbia are now brought before a marshal's jury, who find out their mental condition after the antiquated procedure of the Maryland law of 1785, before they are committed to the hospital by the District authorities. Maryland has long since superseded this law by more enlightened modern legislation, but the District of Columbia, having been set off from the territory of Maryland in the last century, that old enactment of more than a hundred years ago becomes a part of that precious legacy, the common law of the District.

The attention of the Joint Select Committee of Congress to Investigate Charities and Reformatory Institutions in the District of Columbia having been called to the abuse under this proceeding, as well as to the accumulation of nonresident insane from the District in the hospital from the want of power or funds on the part of the District authorities to remove them, it resulted in a letter being addressed to the Secretary of the Interior by the chairman of the joint select committee, calling his attention to the fact that the District was being imposed upon, and requesting him to call the attention of the board of visitors to the matter, with the view of suggesting legislation to remedy the abuse.

The following is the reply:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 17, 1899.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 24th ultimo regarding the necessity for legislation for the proper commitment of insane persons to the Government Hospital for the Insane, I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your consideration, a copy of a letter from the president of the board of visitors of the Government Hospital for the Insane, inclosing a draft of a bill "to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes."

This bill, in the opinion of the board, furnishes an efficient procedure for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane, and provides protection for the United States and the District of Columbia from the expenses and charge of insane persons who did not reside in the District at the time they became mentally disqualified.

Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES McMILLAN,
Chairman Joint Select Committee to Investigate
Charities and Reformatory Institutions in the District of Columbia, United States Senate.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE,
Washington, May 13, 1899.

SIR: In obedience to the request contained in your communication of the 25th of April, ultimo, I have the honor to report that the board of visitors of the Government Hospital for the Insane have given much consideration to the subject referred to in your communication and its inclosure, being a copy of a communication to you from the chairman of the Joint Select Committee to Investigate Charities and Reformatory Institutions in the District of Columbia, and I am instructed by the board to submit for your consideration and that of the joint committee a draft of a bill furnishing, in the opinion of the board, a more efficient procedure for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane and a better provision for the protection of the United States and the District of Columbia from the expense and charge of indigent insane persons who did not reside in the District at the time they became insane.

Following the example of most of the States, we have not provided in the accompanying bill for an inquisition by jury, believing that mode of inquiry to be undesirable in the proceedings contemplated in the bill, and we venture to suggest that such inquiries can be more satisfactorily made by a judge, assisted by expert and other testimony.

It is to be noted, furthermore, that the inquisition by jury is not usual in cases where persons are taken by authority of law from their homes and placed in public hospitals to prevent their maladies from becoming epidemic. We do not perceive that an alleged lunatic is entitled any more to the inquisition by jury than an alleged leper.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

B. SUNDERLAND,
President of Board of Visitors.

Hon. C. N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior.

Bill reported to the United States Senate by Senator FAULKNER for the Committee on the District of Columbia, June 1, 1898, and now on the Senate Calendar, No. 1228.

A bill to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That hereafter proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane of indigent insane persons residing in the District of Columbia, and of independent or pay patients admitted to the said hospital under section 4854 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for admission temporarily to said hospital of nonresident insane persons found in the said District, shall be commenced by petition presented in open court to the justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia holding a special term for orphans' court business, stating the facts necessary to admission to said hospital as heretofore provided by law.

SEC. 2. That such petition shall be signed and sworn to by some responsible resident of the District of Columbia, but shall not be filed until the court shall be satisfied as to the responsibility and residence of the person signing and swearing to the same.

SEC. 3. That the order of the court directing the filing of the petition shall require a copy thereof to be served on the alleged lunatic and another on the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall fix a time for the hearing of the application, and a copy of such order, duly authenticated, shall be inscribed on each of the said copies before service thereof.

SEC. 4. That so soon as may be after the filing of the petition the court shall appoint two or more physicians, not connected with any hospital for the insane, to examine the person alleged in the petition to be insane, and testify as to his mental condition, each of such physicians to be paid a per diem compensation of $10 by the District of Columbia, on the certificate of the court that his account for such service is just and correct, and other witnesses examined on such application shall be paid by the District the fees and allowances prescribed by law for witnesses summoned in behalf of the United States; and all other costs of the proceedings shall be paid by the District: Provided, That in the case of independent or pay patients the petition shall be signed by one of the nearest relatives of such insane person, by his legal guardian, or by some friend.

All costs of the proceeding shall be defrayed out of the estate of such person, and a deposit shall be paid into court sufficient to cover such costs; and the request for admission to said hospital shall be made within five days after the entry of the order of court.

SEC. 5. That the court shall require the presence of the alleged lunatic at the hearing of the application, unless for good reason it shall direct otherwise by an order stating such reason.

SEC. 6. That the order of the court on the hearing of the application on the petition and evidence shall be made without an inquisition by jury, and all the proceedings under the petition shall be entered in the minutes of the court.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, so soon as practicable, to return to their places of residence or to their friends all indigent insane persons not residing in the District at the time they became insane who are now detained in the Government Hospital for the Insane, or who shall be committed to the said hospital to be temporarily cared for, as provided in section 4850 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all necessary expenses incurred by the Commissioners in ascertaining the locality where such persons or their friends belong and in returning them to such locality shall be defrayed by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 8. That all provisions of law inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

It is very much to be hoped that this much-needed legislation will be placed on the statute books at the coming session of the present Congress, and so end the existing clumsy proceedings for the commitment of the District insane. The clause introduced and passed in the general deficiency bill approved July 7, 1898, intended to remedy, does not help matters very much. The following is the language of the act:

Hereafter in all proceedings by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to commit resident indigent insane persons to the Government Hospital for the Insane it shall be the duty of the marshal to impanel juries in such cases from the jurors in attendance upon the criminal courts of said District, who shall perform such service in addition to and as part of their duties in said courts: Provided, That during such time as jurors are not in attendance upon said criminal courts the marshal may in such cases impanel the jurors in attendance upon the police court, who shall perform such duties in addition to and as a part of their duties in said police court.

Aside from the fact that this act makes the expense of these trials a part of an appropriation for the courts rather than a separate item, and elevates somewhat the Falstaffian recruit character of a marshal's jury as usually summoned from the purlieus of the court-house, it really accomplishes nothing. Instead of a careful determination of the mental condition of the person by a judge on the bench, we have the opinion of thirteen men, not on the facts of a crime, but the conditions of a disease of which they have probably had no personal experience.

But assuming that this is a satisfactory and enlightened way of determining the sanity of a man and is more grown and hoary with precedent, this law stops with the "resident indigent insane of the District," and the large number of nonresident insane remain unprovided for, to be sent to the hospital with the semblance of law under the old sections of the Revised Statutes, to remain until the speculative philanthropy of some lawyer compels the superintendent to produce the insane man in court, there to be told by his honor that the papers of commitment are "entirely irregular; the case is dismissed," and the lunatic goes forth to prey upon the community on which some neighboring State has foisted him.

What is wanted is legislation to put an end to all this, to properly protect the rights of the lunatic in his detention, to empower the hospital to detain him, and to require the authorities of the District of Columbia to ascertain, in the case of a nonresident, where he belongs, and, having ascertained this, to send him thither under proper escort, a sufficient appropriation for such purpose having been provided in the District bill. Then will the District of Columbia no longer be made a dumping ground for lunatics, this community will have a rest from the wild-eyed man with a mission, and the pettifogger with his trilobite act of 1785 will cease from troubling.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Mississippi how much more of these documents he desires to put into the RECORD in this case?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Not very much more. There are one or two papers which I desire to have read, and then I shall have a few remarks to make.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say a few words myself in behalf of this amendment, and I hope the Senator will proceed as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I shall proceed, Mr. President, as rapidly as I can consistently with what I believe to be my duty to a people who are strangers to me, and with whom I have but one interest, and that is the simple touch of humanity. So far as I am concerned, I do not know a single inmate of that asylum. I know that we have kept herded together there about 2,000 human souls from whom reason has taken its flight. I know that those people there are not provided for properly.

I know, further than that, Mr. President, that only last Saturday, I think it was, the Senate passed a bill appropriating $250,000 for the Washington Library, to buy a site for a house in which to put books which sane people may read and be edified, educated, and taught, and at the self-same time, right beneath the shadow of this building, we have the greatest library in the world, the most magnificent building, and more books than anybody in the city of Washington or all the surrounding country could read in a lifetime or in many lifetimes over, for that matter. Here is a case absolutely with a necessity for it, and yet you have appropriated $250,000 to buy ground on which to build the Washington Library; and at the same time, right across the river, what do we find? We find your soldiers and sailors, your insane, are absolutely unprovided for.

The question of title came before the committee. Allow me to say that a part of this very ground has been laid out in streets and platted. It became important to determine whether or not a dedication had occurred, and, therefore, whether or not by this act a perfect title could be obtained. In order to meet that objection I suggested that a provision be made in the amendment that whenever the money was paid a perfect title should be made, and that no more of the money should be paid until a perfect title was presented. That will obviate any trouble on that score.

But beyond that, above that, and aside from that, the fact is, as shown by the correspondence on file with the committee, that while those lots have been laid out and while streets have been laid out, not a single lot has been sold in this particular ground; the rights of no third person have intervened.

A single objection occurs that those people desire to retain this property as a park, as their ground for their own benefit, instead of permitting it to be turned over for the public use, for the benefit of the insane soldiers, sailors, and criminals and others. The proposition now here is that the grounds we acquire shall be for the exclusive use of the insane soldiers and sailors, not for the use of those of the criminal class.

Then I say the title is perfect. That was an important matter. At one time the committee, when it had that question before it, understood there was trouble about the title on account of the dedication of the streets to run through the grounds; but that has been revoked, and there is no objection on that ground now. The last single one who objected to that has withdrawn the objection, and that dedication has been canceled.

The next question which comes is whether or not this increase is really necessary. If the title is good, if the location is good, if it is near to the city, if it is convenient, is it needed? The superintendent, Dr. Godding, is the best judge of that. He has no interest in the matter whatever, so far as I know or believe, and the superintendent, with his years of experience, with his years of devotion to the cause of the insane, says that it is not only proper, but absolutely necessary, and that it is the only ground that should be used, the only ground that is adjacent, the only ground convenient, the only ground suitable for the purpose.

For those reasons it appears to me that this opportunity which we have now to add these grounds to the asylum property should be embraced, and the question at once occurs as to the value of the ground. It has been objected that the price is too great and that the property is being offered for two, three, or four times what it is worth. On that subject a report is made by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds which shows that whereas years ago the property over there was selling for 10 cents per square foot, since the building of the electric railway, since the streets there are lighted by electricity, since the improvements have gone on over there, and since the upbuilding of that whole section, property there now is worth about 30 cents a square foot.

What is the proposition here? Is it to pay 25 cents or 15 cents or 10 cents a square foot? Not at all, but one-half of 10 cents—5 cents per square foot, which is less than the lots are absolutely selling there for to-day, and after the grounds have been platted and the lots offered in severalty, so that, so far as the value is concerned, the price appears to be reasonable.

It has been suggested, and probably will be suggested here now, that some years ago one portion of this ground was bought for $15,000. That is true, as I understand it, but that was a very small portion of the present ground and it was before these improvements had been made and before the railway was constructed there and before this was really a little city of itself. It was then merely in the woods outside, and was practically of no value except for farming lands.

Now, the point is, if you wait a little while longer, if you delay this matter for a year or two years, as that community builds up and property becomes more and more valuable, if it is ever bought at all, you will have to pay more and more year after year. The opportunity is presented now. That opportunity is to get it for about one-half of its real value, as represented by those who live there and who deal in this class of property, and who have stated in writing, and I have here their letters, the value of this class of property. In this connection I will have read statements on that subject.

I do not care unduly to detain the Senate or to annoy anyone with an unreasonable presentation of the case. It may be objected as having been platted and mapped, and that you can not revoke by a simple declaration that you do revoke this dedication. I ask that the letters may be read, so that the value of the property may be ascertained, and also as showing the condition of it, and showing the facts with respect to dedication.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the proposed revocation of dedication?

Mr. SULLIVAN. These letters show. There has been, I will say to the Senator, not a single lot marked out, not a single street laid out or opened. It is a virgin forest, a park simply, adjoining this property of the asylum, and no human being has bought one single foot of ground there. While a plat has been made, and that plat, I understand, has been recorded, not a human being has gone in there to take possession of or to buy or to expend anything upon that particular ground. Those people desire to retain it as a park for their own private benefit over there. It is the only ground that can be had near the asylum ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Washington, D. C., November 14, 1898.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of this date asking my opinion of value of property at Congress Heights received. I know this property, as the late John Jay Knox, ex-Comptroller of the Currency, my brother-in-law, owned the original Congress Heights tract and sold this property in 1890 to A. E. Randle, esq., who has since revolutionized this section, and it is a revelation to the business men of Washington who visit Congress Heights to see the transformation made in the last few years. The place is lighted up at the Government expense, one of the handsomest schoolhouses in the District erected by appropriation by Congress, and a trolley railroad is now completed which has free transfers with a $12,000,000 street-car system, so that Congress Heights can be reached from any part of Washington for 5 cents.

There is a bill now before Congress to appropriate $300,000 to build a bridge from the foot of South Capitol street to Congress Heights. There is no doubt that in a few years this bridge will be built by the Government, as it gives the Government direct communication from the south of the Capitol down the Potomac to Fort Washington, Fort Foote, United States magazine, and Indian Head proving grounds, where the Government is now expending a large amount of money erecting a smokeless-powder plant. I consider Randle Park worth $2,500 an acre, or $300,000 for the 80 acres, and base this opinion on the price for which this property is selling there now by the lot. All large tracts are controlled by A. E. Randle, who paid $800 an acre for 22 acres there before any improvements were made.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM B. TODD.

Messrs. GASCH BROS.

This is to certify that we have $60,000 to loan on Congress Heights property. We value the lots in making a loan at $250 each; corner lots more. We had this property valued by three appraisers for the purpose of loaning money, and above figure is the lowest value they put on it.

We have loaned to the following:

Charles M. Emmons, Mrs. E. M. Grant, Mrs. De Thonars, Virginia Grover, C. W. Huske, Mrs. H. L. Chew, D. Meitzler, O. A. Emmons, J. S. Edelin. And ready to loan to others on the same valuation.

Do not loan large sums.

GEO. W. POE.

OFFICE ENGINEER COMMISSIONER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 27, 1899.

SENATOR: In reply to your letter of February 24 concerning the subdivision of Penceote Heights, I have to inclose herewith map showing the subdivision in question, and would state that the Commissioners see no objection to taking this map from the public records. The subdivision was made under the act of 1888 requiring exact conformity with the city plan, and no choice was given the party making the subdivision of laying off lots and streets to conform to the topographical features of the ground.

The system of streets, in the manner shown, would be extremely difficult, owing to the grades which would have to be adopted, and it is believed that better results could be secured throughout if the subdivision were removed entirely from the records.

The Columbia Title Insurance Company reports that no lots in this subdivision have been sold, and if the facts are as stated by this company, the Commissioners would recommend that the subdivision be removed from the records and annulled.

Very respectfully,

LANSING H. BEACH,
Captain, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.,
Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

Hon. W. V. SULLIVAN, United States Senate.

Mr. SULLIVAN. It appears that the single question which is here for consideration is not one of title, it is not one of value, it is not one of location, because the title is perfect and the location is desirable. The single question is of necessity. We have from the superintendent the statement as to the necessity, as contained in a letter to Senator CHANDLER, attached to the report sent in by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

That necessity is set forth so clearly there that it is unnecessary for me to say anything further on the subject. Therefore we have a case where the only question remaining, apparently, is whether we are going to permit the present state of affairs to continue for the future—whether we are going to permit the criminal classes to be dumped in there and held there with the other classes of insane; whether we are going to permit the races to be mingled there the one with the other. No sane man would submit to the very same treatment to which the insane are—without their consent of course—subjected.

Here we lavishly spend money. Here we lavishly vote away day after day money for those who really do not need it so much, and we vote gratuities; we give this and that sum; and yet these people are not only not provided for properly, but absolutely a state of affairs is permitted to exist there that is a scandal and a disgrace to the Government. When I saw that an appropriation of $250,000 was about to be made last week to build an additional library in the city, while, so far as I am concerned, I wish a library was in every town. I could not help but think about the hundreds and hundreds of claims in what is known as the omnibus bill, and the omnibus bill, containing these claims, carries with it judgments or findings in favor of various claimants for thousands and thousands of dollars, some thirty years old, for property taken during the war; and year after year these people have waited and waited to be paid.

Many of them have absolutely died in despair, having given it up. The Government does not pay its debts. We are willing to give bounties to this and that and the other thing that does not really need it, and yet those real objects of charity we let go by. We let our own debts, honest debts, due for many years, just as all those debts under the Tucker and Bowman acts have been due for many years, go by unheeded, unthought of, unpaid. I want to make this last appeal in behalf of those people who are there, who are helpless, who have no one to speak for them.

Are you going to permit them to remain as they have been for a long time, blending criminals with the other classes, blending races, or will you erect suitable buildings for the old sailors and soldiers and separate one from the other and give them decent quarters, so that they may spend their declining years in a comfortable way? It is evident that unless you give them some kind of employment there is no hope of any recovery mentally. We want the ground not only for them to live upon, to build upon, but ground for them to work upon. I say, therefore, that this opportunity is one which, if it is not embraced now and is embraced a little later, will cost twice as much as it would to-day.

The question is whether or not you will amend the sundry civil bill by placing on it the authority to buy this ground to separate the criminal classes of the insane from the other insane classes, or suffer them to remain there as they have remained for some time, without decent or proper accommodations.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be accepted by the Senator from Iowa in charge of the appropriation bill. This subject was called to my attention in a letter to me dated February 14 of the present year, written by Dr. Godding, superintendent of what is known as the St. Elizabeth's Asylum for the Insane. That letter has been printed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in their report in favor of this amendment.

I would not think of urging the appropriation at this time if it had not met with the approbation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It stands here not as the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi, not as my proposition, but as the proposition of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which has examined this subject and made a written report, which is before the Senate.

Mr. President, something more ought to be done than has already been done in order to separate from the insane of the Army and Navy of the United States the insane United States convicts who have been taken from the penitentiaries of this country and sent to St. Elizabeth's Asylum. This asylum is one of the most magnificent institutions in the whole country. It is large, and likewise the expenditures for its maintenance are large. The original design of the institution did not contemplate that in addition to the insane of our Army and our Navy there should be admitted to the asylum insane convicts.

For some reason or other, however, according to the will of Congress, in 1852 an act was passed authorizing the transfer to the asylum of the various United States convicts in the penitentiaries over the country who were insane. They were, in pursuance of that law, taken to St. Elizabeth's, and according to the statement of Dr. Godding there are now 109 of these criminals. They are criminals of all grades, of all colors, black and white. The insane of the degraded class in the community have been taken from the jails and prisons of the country and sent to St. Elizabeth's to be treated in connection with the soldiers and sailors of the Republic. The mistake, in my judgment, was when the act of 1852 was passed.

Mr. SPOONER. How much land is there now belonging to the Government?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have said nothing of the land. I will come to the question of land and to the Senator from Wisconsin in a few moments, if he will indulge me in the delay.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the proposition I made when the Senator from Wisconsin desired to ask me a question is one in which he will concur, and that is that when a great institution of this kind is established by the United States for the proper care and treatment of insane soldiers and sailors we should not put in connection with those objects of our care and affection the United States penitentiary prisoners of the country who may be insane. We should take kind care of the insane convicts. I entirely approve of transferring them from the jails and the prisons to asylums, but those asylums should not be maintained in connection with asylums that are established for persons who are not convicts, and especially not connected with the soldiers and sailors of the Union.

Mr. President, that was done, much trouble ensued, much criticism took place, and recently, as I am informed by the Senator from Iowa, a separate building has been provided for the insane convicts, but that building is in close connection with the existing asylum used for the insane soldiers and sailors. It is the opinion of the superintendent, Dr. Godding, that this additional land should be acquired for the purpose of effecting a still further separation of the soldiers and sailors from the insane convicts. That opinion of his has been indorsed by a committee of this body, and therefore I make no apology for speaking in favor of that opinion in this presence.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin asked me how much land there was. If the Senator will look at the report of the committee, he will find that there are about 70 acres in the subdivision.

Mr. SULLIVAN. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I think 108 is the correct number of acres.

Mr. CHANDLER. One hundred and eight acres. It is a very large tract of ground, a park which those who know this institution best believe ought to be acquired at this time and in this way. I plead for the adoption of this amendment now. If it needs to be guarded or protected in any way, the guarding and protecting can be done by the committee of conference. But I hope the matter may not be delayed.

I know that Congress is being crowded in these last days with many projects, and a great many of the projects that are now being urged upon Congress will have to be delayed; they will not come to a realization before the 4th of March. But I entreat that this particular charity and beneficence of the Government shall not be postponed. I trust that the Committee on Appropriations will accept this amendment and will deal kindly and successfully with it in the conference to which it will go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN].

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the amendment read. The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I judged from the argument made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that this amendment was for the purpose of taking care of the criminal insane, but the amendment itself does not seem to indicate that. I think he argued that they should be separated from the others. Now, the fact of the matter is, there are 500 acres in the original insane asylum tract. We now own that amount of land at this point, where the insane asylum is now located. Aside from that, the Government owns 300 acres of ground opposite Alexandria, on the east side of the Potomac River. There is plenty of ground for every purpose. There is no question about that. If the criminal insane should be separated from the others, the building should be placed, it seems to me, upon the tract opposite Alexandria, instead of purchasing the ground upon the heights next to the present building.

The tract of ground which it is proposed to purchase has not been estimated for, and there is no proof, except hearsay evidence, with regard to its value, and the price proposed to be paid is over $2,000 per acre. I submit whether it is not an unusual proceeding to ask Congress to appropriate this large sum of money without any real evidence as to the value of the property to be purchased for a doubtful purpose?

What is more, there are twenty buildings, dwellings, belonging to private parties lying between a portion of the land it is proposed to purchase and the present tract owned by the insane asylum. Part of the ground is platted, and the amendment proposes by legislation to vacate the plat. As near as I can understand it, a portion of this platted ground has been sold in lots and houses have been built upon it. We have no right and no power to vacate that plat. There is a proceeding in court by which every party is notified to come in and answer the complaint and set up his rights and interests, and the public notified as well. It is a simple proceeding, but you propose to vacate a plat where streets and alleys have been dedicated to the public.

As near as I can understand it, lots have been sold and private dwellings have been built on the property. So absurd a proposition was never brought in before, it seems to me. I refer not only to the extravagance of expecting Congress to vote $2,000 an acre for this tract of land, but to the proposition to vacate a plat, to perform a judicial function. I do not know what interest there may be behind pressing this amendment, but it is certainly one of the most remarkable things that has been presented to this body since I have been acquainted with it.

Further than that, the citizens of this locality have some rights. Here is a letter:

CONGRESS HEIGHTS, D. C., February 23, 1899.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned officers of the Congress Heights Citizens' Association, respectfully submit for your favorable consideration the accompanying resolution, protesting against Senate bill 5585, for the purchase of Wilson Park as an addition to the Government Asylum for the Insane, which resolution was unanimously adopted at the weekly meeting of said association held February 21, 1899.

CHAS. W. FRAZIER, President.

Honorable COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
United States Senate.

Now let us see what the resolution is:

CONGRESS HEIGHTS, D. C., February 21, 1899.

Resolved by the Congress Heights Citizens' Association, That it is both unwise and inexpedient for the Government to purchase for the use of the Government Insane Asylum the land described as Wilson Park, for the following reasons, viz:

The said Wilson Park does not adjoin the insane asylum grounds, but is separated therefrom by at least  $\frac{3}{4}$  acres front on Nichols avenue, with about twenty dwellings situated thereon.

The present site of the asylum contains ample ground for the erection of buildings for the accommodation of three times the present number of patients and employees, and said space is now used largely for farming and gardening for use of the asylum.

The asylum grounds now embrace about 500 acres, and are situated upon both sides of Nichols avenue for a distance of at least  $\frac{1}{2}$  miles, and should Wilson Park be included the line of the asylum would be extended to a point within 50 yards of our public school, which has a daily attendance of 500 children, and we believe that the language and actions of the patients would tend to demoralize the school and affect the discipline and rating of the scholars.

It seems to me that the resolution passed by the citizens who live in that locality ought to be fatal to the amendment even if it were not so objectionable otherwise. I fail to see any possible argument that can be advanced in favor of adopting this amendment upon its merits. I am not going to raise the point of order, although it is subject to the point of order, as it is not estimated for, and because it contains legislation. But I am not going to make the point of order, because the Senate ought to defeat the amendment upon its merits and because there is no possible argument I can think of that justifies it.

The argument of the Senator from New Hampshire is an argument against its purchase, if anyone will look at the map. He says we must have a place to confine the insane criminal convicts remote from the other insane. Now, this tract lies right along the present tract, entirely contiguous to it, fronting on the Potomac River, while we have opposite Alexandria 300 acres where the unfortunates can be confined. So the argument of the Senator from New Hampshire is not worth a straw. I do not think he thought it was worth a straw. I do not think he is for the amendment. I can generally tell when he is earnest, and this is not one of the occasions.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator thinks that to be in earnest a man must call names, as he does, and declare that the recommendations of a committee of this body are absurd, I am not in earnest in that way. I am not certain that this project is put in exactly the correct shape. I think it might have been better prepared. But I am in earnest in having the provision made in connection with Congress Heights by which the buildings that shall contain the insane convicts shall be separated from the buildings that contain the insane sailors and soldiers of the nation, and it can only be done, in my judgment, by acquiring this lot of ground. The Senator says that there is land on the opposite side of the river, on the Alexandria side.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; on this side of the river.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know anything about such land, and, to argue in about the style the Senator adopts, I do not think he knows anything about such land.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that there is a tract of 350 acres of land on the same side of the Potomac as the insane asylum, which is used now as a farm.

Mr. CHANDLER. How far down the river is it?

Mr. ALLISON. It is about opposite Alexandria.

Mr. CHANDLER. Half a dozen miles below.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a farm—it is used as a farm for the insane people.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is a farm for the institute.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am glad to get confirmation of the statement made by the Senator from South Dakota from the Senator from Iowa. Indorsed by the Senator from Iowa, I will believe the statement. But, Mr. President, it is possible that that lot of ground is too far away. Congress has decided that there shall be treated on the ground at the St. Elizabeth's Asylum both classes of insane persons, and now the demand is put in this specific form that it shall be done by acquiring more land and separating the buildings which are to contain the two classes of patients farther away from each other than they can be separated if the buildings are all erected upon the ground now owned by the United States. That is a sensible and a wise proposition, and it is not to be met by saying that there is a large lot of ground away off down the river.

Mr. President, I think there are other committees in this body that are entitled to as much consideration as the Committee on Appropriations, to which the Senator from South Dakota belongs and in whose behalf he has seen fit to denounce this benevolent project. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. QUAY; and upon the committee are the Senator from Wyoming, Mr. WARREN; the Senator from Indiana, Mr. FAIRBANKS; the Senator from Maryland, Mr. WELLINGTON; the Senator from Oregon, Mr. SIMON; the Senator from Missouri, Mr. VEST; the Senator from Montana, Mr. MANTLE; the Senator from New York, Mr. MURPHY; the Senator from Utah, Mr. RAWLINS; the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, and the Senator from Washington, Mr. TURNER.

There is just as much ability, just as much integrity, just as great a regard for economy upon that committee as there is upon the Committee on Appropriations. I speak in behalf of a measure from that committee, and I submit that it is contrary to good custom in the Senate for any Senator to denounce as absurd a proposition coming from that committee in this way in behalf of a great humane project of this kind.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in response to the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota, who said that there were certain lots sold out of this ground and that certain people occupy that territory. I presume he really is giving his best information on the subject. It is also suggested that this lot does not adjoin the other ground now held by the asylum.

Some days ago, when the gentlemen who presented the resolution of the citizens of Congress Heights desired to have the matter investigated, I went over there and with them went over the ground to see just what the truth might be, because I did not desire to stand up here and advocate a matter about which there could be a question of doubt. I did not desire to come here and ask the Senate to vote for a measure that I believed to be wrong. I therefore went to examine what they complained of, to see exactly where the lots lay that have been sold and what the situation is.

I say to Senators that the land that is proposed to be sold now is not only adjacent to the present asylum grounds, but there is a mere little v-shaped piece that comes in on the eastern side embracing a few houses that has never belonged at any time to the asylum property, but which if we need it later might be taken in, and which is in no wise in the way of the purchase of this particular tract.

This land adjoins the asylum property and goes on southward down the river, I think, in a southwesterly direction. It is the only high, dry, and commanding view along that whole section of the country. It is the only available property. So far as the sale of a few lots is concerned, not out of this ground, but by some one else years ago, that does not in any wise militate against the project now proposed.

Then, again, it is suggested that the resolution sent here said that it ought not to be purchased by the Government for various reasons, setting forth the reasons. Those people are perfectly honest in their opinion. There is a gentleman, a Mr. Frazier, who was chairman of the meeting, and a Mr. Simpson was there. I have gone with those gentlemen through this matter carefully. They believed that the sale which was about to be made was of 39 acres of land, and only 39 acres. They believed that the 39 acres had been bought for $15,000. When they represented those facts to me, I went for the purpose of seeing whether that was true, with a determination in my mind that if it was the fact I would never call up the bill at all.

But I found the truth to be they were entirely misled and completely mistaken about the matter. Instead of being simply 39 acres, there are more than a hundred acres. The very ground that they do not suppose is embraced at all is, I find, the very ground, covering the whole river front there, that is embraced in this transaction. It is not only proper and right that it should be owned by the Government, but it is the only available part of the whole territory there that can be used for this purpose later.

So the gentlemen who passed the resolution which was referred to by the Senator from South Dakota did not understand the fact that instead of 39 acres there were more than a hundred acres. They did not understand the fact that this sale covered the entire body instead of simply a small portion of it. The Senator does not know the fact that the lot he refers to does not cut into and separate the one tract from the other. The truth is that the two tracts absolutely adjoin, a little bit being cut out on the extreme eastern side.

It was said a while ago that there were 350 acres 3 or 4 miles away. I presume the land the Senator referred to is that which had been bought down in Maryland somewhere, completely segregated and separated from this ground. It never should have been bought, and it ought not to belong to us to-day. Every bit of it ought to have been right there together under the immediate eye and guidance and control and supervision of the superintendent of the asylum. Those people there have to be kept within the walls, and the walls have to be extended. The question is, Are you going to try to restore their reason? Are you going to try to restore them to health and life and happiness once more? And the question again is whether or not you are going to keep, as you are now doing, the insane criminal in there with the insane soldier and sailor?

The land that you have down there is not ample when you have got 2,000 persons that need occupation and employment. The mere small tract of land you have is wholly inadequate. Take the representation of your own superintendent, and you will see that. For these reasons I urge that Senators consider the fact that so far as the title is concerned, it is perfect; that so far as the dedication is concerned, it has been revoked in the most solemn form, and that so far as the location is concerned, it is complete.

The very gentlemen who were present in that citizens' meeting and who opposed this purchase, the very gentlemen who came here with this resolution, understood that about $6,000 per acre was being paid for this very ground. If Senators will give me their attention for one moment, they will understand that when those people talked about giving $6,000 per acre they thought that was unreasonable. I put the question to those very gentlemen whether or not they would take $2,000 per acre for their ground, and they said they would not do it. Yet the Senator from South Dakota has said that the price is about $2,000 per acre. Suppose those very gentlemen will not take that sum for theirs. Their idea was that between $5,000 and $6,000 per acre was being paid for this land. In truth and in fact, it is less than that, a little above $2,000.

Now, if this matter is delayed until the spring comes and after the streets are cut through, that whole park will be defaced and the purposes for which we want it will be very much injured. For these reasons I submit that we ought to act now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I move to insert, on page 73, after line 11, the following:

Memorial bridge across the Potomac River: To enable the Chief of Engineers of the Army to continue the examination of the subject and to make or secure designs, calculations, and estimates for a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds or adjacent thereto across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate and property, the sum of $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN. I will simply state that in the sundry civil appropriation act approved the 4th of June, 1897, an appropriation was made for this purpose. The Secretary of War has expended that appropriation, and has reported that it is insufficient to accomplish the purpose intended. He estimates that $5,000 will accomplish the purpose, and asks that that amount be furnished. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. On page 68, line 19, I move to insert "fifty" in place of "twenty-five."

The SECRETARY. In line 19, page 68, amend the committee amendment by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifty;" so as to read:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $250,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the amount necessary to meet the appropriations that the States are ready to make for cooperative work. This work has been finished in a number of States now. There are eight States ready to appropriate the money to do the work and spend dollar for dollar with the Government. My State is ready to spend $5,000, West Virginia $10,000, and Pennsylvania $20,000. I misplaced the paper giving the appropriations of other States. I will ask to put in the RECORD a statement giving the reasons for this increased appropriation, and also the list of States that have had this work done, showing what has been done in those States and what will be done in other States by this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I regret that the Senator from North Carolina has offered this amendment. There is an ample appropriation provided for to meet every purpose suggested by the Senator, and I think the ultimate result of his amendment, if it shall be adopted by the Senate, will be to diminish rather than increase the appropriation.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I would take the time of the Senate to go over the reasons that I have sent up to be printed in the RECORD, if I thought it was necessary. I put them in the RECORD to sustain the conferees on the part of the Senate in keeping in the increased appropriation. I think the facts set forth will sustain them in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that as he proposes to amend the committee amendment already adopted, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted or withhold his amendment until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withhold it for the time being.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. Then I will also withhold the statement to which I have referred and put it into the RECORD when I again offer the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1139) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office and other civil offices in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, a literal copy of the bill just received from the House passed the Senate a day or two ago, and by some misunderstanding or mistake it failed to get over to the House. The Senator from Iowa has kindly consented to let me ask unanimous consent to pass the House bill. It has already passed the Senate literally and absolutely as it is now.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not understand the wish of the Senator to pass a bill. I supposed he wanted to rectify a tangle between the two Houses, which I was perfectly willing he should do.

Mr. BERRY. It is a tangle, because the Clerk failed by mistake to send it over as I requested, and the House bill was taken up instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a tangle that inures to the benefit of the Senator in a very curious way.

Mr. BERRY. I want to have the bill passed. It will not take two minutes if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. BERRY. It will lead to no debate. It is not possible. It has already passed the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill from the House, which the Chair will lay before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 1139) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office and other civil offices in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. There are a number of public building bills. I trust the Senator from Arkansas will allow this bill to lie upon the table until the other public building bills come over. It is perfectly well known that there are a number of them pending in the House of Representatives. They will be arriving here every ten or fifteen minutes, and they must all be considered sooner or later. At a later hour to-day these bills can be considered.

Mr. BERRY. It is because of the mistake of the Clerk. Otherwise the Senate bill would have been passed instead of the House bill. That is the peculiar situation under which I ask its consideration. I assure the Senator from Iowa it will not interfere with the passage of any other public-building bill. It has already passed the Senate, and identically the same bill has passed the House. I insist that the Senator should let me pass the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. But there may be other bills equally meritorious that will be here very soon. Therefore I trust the Senator from Arkansas will allow, as I hope other Senators will, these public-building bills to lie quietly on the table until we have them here in such numbers at least as that they can be considered. I hope some of them may get on the sundry civil bill before its passage.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will not insist on his objection. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object, but I want to give notice that this is the last public-building bill that I will allow to be passed pending the consideration of the sundry civil bill, until all of them may reach the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent is asked by the Senator from Arkansas for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1139) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office and other civil offices in the city of Hot Springs, Ark. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. FAULKNER. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 118 as a new section after line 21.

The SECRETARY. Insert, after line 21, on page 118:

SEC. —. That any jury summoned for service in any of the circuit or criminal courts may, with the concurrence of the justice presiding in such court, be used for the trial of issues in the orphans' court.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia giving the reasons and showing the necessity of this amendment.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 24, 1899.

SIR: The act of Congress of June 8, 1898, gives the orphans' court power to try issues in that court with a jury, and requires the jury to be drawn and summoned in like manner as are the juries in the circuit court.

This requirement of a jury for special service in that court by actual test in the current month has proved to be awkward, inconvenient, and unnecessarily expensive to the United States.

The justice holding criminal court No. 2 has been assigned for this year to the orphans' court also. He is obliged to have 26 jurors summoned each month for service in the criminal court. He can not try criminal cases and will issue at the same time, and there is no reason why the jury in that court when not engaged in criminal trials should not be used in the trial of orphans' court issues. These issues are few. The criminal business will, it is believed, readily admit of such occasional use of the jury as may be necessary. If that justice is compelled to have a full panel for each court it will frequently happen that both will be in attendance when only one can be utilized, involving thereby the needless expense of the per diem of $52. This has been the experience of this month, and in addition to the expense of summoning the jurors, the actual loss to the Government has been about $38. To prevent further useless expense, and in the hope of securing the amendment asked, the justice presiding discharged the orphans' court jury a few days since.

It may be well to add that the monthly drawing of 104 men for service in the two circuit and two criminal courts, added to the number drawn for the grand jury and for service in the police court, is a great drain upon the number of citizens available for such service. All salaried officers of the United States are exempt, and twenty days' service in this court exempts the party from further call for a year.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BINGHAM, Chief Justice.
A. C. BRADLEY.
CHAS. C. COLE.

HON. JAMES McMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to say further that this is, I believe, the only amendment proposed to the bill which saves the Government money instead of taking money out of the Treasury. The purpose of the amendment is to reduce the expenditures of the District of Columbia to $56 a day.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. On page 63, after line 19, I move to insert:

That to aid the public-land States in the reclamation of the desert lands therein, and more especially to enable them to secure a revenue wherewith the lands granted to them by section 4 of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, may be fully and effectively reclaimed and subjected to cultivation preparatory to their sale in small tracts to actual settlers, 5,000,000 acres of unappropriated public lands not valuable for timber or minerals, nor for agriculture without irrigation, are hereby granted to each of the States in which there may be situated desert lands, as defined by the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877, and the act amendatory thereof approved March 3, 1891.

SEC. 2. That the lands hereby granted shall be selected by the proper authorities of the respective States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, according to the public surveys, in tracts not less than a quarter section in area, and upon approval of any such selection by the Secretary of the Interior the land included therein shall be patented to the State.

SEC. 3. That the lands hereby granted may be rented, leased, or sold by the State under such laws, rules, and regulations as may be prescribed by the legislature thereof, but the net proceeds arising therefrom shall be devoted and applied solely and exclusively to the reclamation of the arid lands in such State, and the acceptance by any State of the grant hereby made shall constitute an irrevocable pledge and obligation upon the part of the State to devote and apply said proceeds to this purpose and none other.

Mr. ALLISON. That is legislation of a general character. I must object to it on that ground.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withhold the objection for one moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I will do so.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, there has been considerable discussion about aiding irrigation. During the recent debate the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] renewed a suggestion that he made some ten years ago, that the public lands in those States ought to be made available for that purpose. There is no public land in any of the States where irrigation is required where homesteads can be made.

You can not make homesteads there at all. The homestead law is absolutely inoperative. In order to make the lands available at all there must be irrigation. Irrigation works there now, since the land along the streams has been appropriated, are too expensive for immigrants to engage in. Something must be done. The States know best how to do it. The States know best how to make these lands available. There is a precedent for putting this provision in the bill. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that he allowed a similar amendment to be made to an appropriation bill. It is alluded to in the preceding paragraph.

EXAMINATIONS OF DESERT LANDS.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to examine, under such regulations and at such compensation as he may prescribe, the desert lands selected by the States under the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved August 18, 1894, $3,000.

This was a provision granting under certain conditions—and the conditions were such that they could not well be complied with—a million acres of land to each State; but it made irrigation the requirement of the grant, and the lands have not been made available.

The only way to make these lands available is to turn them over to the States. Then the States can sell them; they can lease them for grazing purposes; they can use them for any purpose they please, get a revenue from them, and apply it to irrigation. The public sentiment in the States is in favor of irrigation; so the application of the money will be such there that they can be safely trusted. The members of the legislatures of these various States represent districts where irrigation is required, and they will watch the funds more narrowly than would anybody else.

You are rather extravagant here with our public lands. You gave over 20,000,000 acres—and I do not know but it was 30,000,000 acres—of land to the wind, and we could not get them back and opened to settlement. You boldly took them away from us and put them into what was called a reservation for timber purposes. You said it was to preserve the timber; but it was simply for the purpose of hitting the West a terrible blow. Your legislation in that way prevented the States from having anything to say about this matter. I plead for this donation to the States. That is the only way to solve the question.

There are objections made here that you are not willing to adopt the same system that you do as to the river and harbor bill. The arid and semiarid States receive nothing from the appropriations for rivers and harbors; they are in the interior. It was suggested here and urged very strongly that we should enter upon the system of making direct appropriation out of the Treasury, the same as is done for rivers and harbors. That would be very reasonable if you intend to serve all sections of the country alike.

This amendment takes nothing out of the Treasury, but will put money into the Treasury, and it will enable those sections of the country to be developed. It is not a reservation of a whole section of country as large as New England, as was done here in the dark in an hour to prevent the settlement of the West. It is in aid of settlement; it is in aid of the people; and it is very important that it should be done.

The objection which is now made is waived constantly when it is said there are great emergencies upon us. It was waived once on this same proposition, and I hope my friend from Iowa will now waive his objection in favor of this very desirable proposition.

The Committee on Irrigation have considered this matter at length, and have unanimously recommended this amendment. They reported a bill of exactly this character. I tell my friend from Iowa that if this amendment is agreed to, the subject of irrigation will annoy him less in this shape than in any other in which it can be put. If he supposes he can avoid a discussion of irrigation every year when the sundry civil appropriation bill comes up, he is mistaken; and it will come up in not so good a shape as this, in my judgment. Here is a matured plan to allow the States to have control of 5,000,000 acres of land so as to allow them to help develop the country.

This land can not now be settled upon; it can not be utilized without great expenditure. Private enterprise is inadequate to do it. Besides, the land would be taken up only under great difficulty, because no company would get enough land in any one place to justify it in making the necessary expenditure. It can not be done, and it will not be done, unless there is some governmental action. But if the States can have a fund which they can appropriate to the different sections in the States, it would be expended upon a different basis from the way it would be if made here, for in the various States there will be a contest as to where the money shall go, and anyone who gets any of this money will have to make a better showing than his neighbors. It will be a public question which will be discussed in the States, where they are intelligent and know more about this subject than is known here.

I hope the Senator from Iowa will waive his objection and let the Senate vote on this proposition, for it will not down. It will be constantly coming up in various shapes, which will be embarrassing to Congress, involving new principles and involving new discussions.

You granted swamp lands to the States for purposes of reclamation. There is nothing new in the principle of this amendment; and its necessity grows out of the nature of the case. You can not do anything else with those lands. None of them are being sold or preempted or taken under the homestead laws. You can not sell them, and you must hold them as barren wastes. Let the States take hold of them and they can utilize these lands. They will rent them for pasturage purposes; they will bring pasture lands into the market. If you dig a ditch in the neighborhood of a valley these pasture lands of the hills may be sold or rented.

I beg for local self-government for these States, and I hope the Senator will let the amendment be adopted. I believe if it was thoroughly understood, there would not be a dissenting vote in either House of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not object to a discussion of the question of irrigation. What I object to respecting this amendment on the sundry civil bill is that we have not now a proper opportunity for its discussion. Here is a proposition presented by the Senator from Nevada, from a standing committee of this body, it is true, which I have no doubt has considered very carefully and cautiously the provisions of the amendment. It provides for granting away a large part of the public domain. It seems to me that a matter of that character ought to be discussed not only in the committee room, but in the Senate, and it is obvious that that discussion can not take place between now and the adjournment of this Congress. So I insist upon my point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must sustain the point of order made by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am not fully advised as to the exact status of the bill, but I wish to return for a moment, with the permission of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to pages 59 and 60. I desire to offer an amendment after the word "dollars," in line 1 on page 60, by inserting the words "to be immediately available."

This is legislation for the protection and administration of the forestry reserves, which we have heretofore in the Senate had so much debate over, which ought to be repealed, and which it would be proper and right if we would entirely repeal.

I said in the last Congress that the ultimate cost and expenditure would be not short of $25,000,000. I am prepared to say to-day, after a further examination, that to carry out the project of the Department of the Interior and that attempted by the Committee on Appropriations will cost about $50,000,000; and I can not see at this time any adequate benefits whatever to be derived from it.

In the State I have the honor to represent in part a slice has been taken right across the backbone, so to speak, of that State larger than the State of Massachusetts. No railroad can now cross my State until we come to Congress for relief. All improvement has stopped in that area and we are here appropriating, in order to prevent forest fires, a small amount of money, namely, $175,000, for all these reservations throughout the Western country, which is not quite a cent an acre. We expect that cent an acre to put out the fires, to pay the supervisors, the inspectors, the guardsmen, and all that sort of thing.

To-day we stand with that reserve, without a dollar to pay anybody under the appropriation we had last year. If the amendment which I have offered, inserting the words "to be immediately available," should not be agreed to, we can do nothing, of course, until the 1st day of July next. Congress, by this legislation, having taken possession of our property, it would seem nothing more than proper and right and equitable that they should make proper appropriations to take care of it. I hope the amendment will be adopted, although the appropriation is not by any manner of means sufficient to carry out the work which has been indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the pending bill. I have already submitted it to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to present a document.

Mr. WHITE. I should be very glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois, but I have been struggling for several hours to obtain the right of entry.

Mr. CULLOM. I will not interfere with the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 23, on page 70, it is proposed to insert:

That the provision in section 3 of the act approved February 28, 1891 (26 United States Statutes at Large, page 794), namely, that where lands are occupied by Indians who have bought and paid for the same, and which lands are not needed for farming or agricultural purposes and are not desired for individual allotment, the same may be leased by authority of the council speaking for such Indians for a period not to exceed five years, for grazing purposes only, in such quantities and upon such terms and conditions as the agent in charge at the reservation may recommend, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same hereby is, extended to include and to apply to the White Mountain Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as recognizing the title or ownership of the Indians in or to any part of said White Mountain Apache and San Carlos Indian Reservation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think there ought to be some explanation of this amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the explanation ought to come from the other side. There seems to be an exclusion of a part of this country from a general statute. There is no explanation needed, I think, except to say that there is no reason why this particular land in the Territory of Arizona should not occupy a status identical with that occupied by similar lands elsewhere. There is no attempt here to do anything more than to place in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior and his subordinate officers the right to make leases under the conditions prescribed in the statute.

There is land in Arizona to-day which can be useful for pasturage, which is virtually taken out of the market, and which it is impossible now for any citizen of the United States, or any person whatsoever, to avail himself of, and which he ought to have a right to enjoy. So long as we leave it entirely in the hands of the Federal officers, and commission them to do as they may see fit, it appears to me there can be no danger at all.

The amendment was criticised at first because it was said it might be a recognition of some title in the Indians, but the proviso attached to it, which has been suggested by the Department, negatives the possibility of any such claim.

I hope there will be no objection to the amendment. I can not see why there should be.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment, in substance, was offered by me to the Indian appropriation bill, it having been examined by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and recommended by them.

Mr. WHITE. The proviso in this amendment was inserted by them.

Mr. ALLISON. There was, however, a request made by me to have them make provision for the securing of a title in the United States, as indicated in this proviso. When the amendment came back to me, it included mineral lands as well as pasturage lands. I then took the liberty of withdrawing the amendment from consideration on the Indian appropriation bill.

Since that time the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has stated to me that if an opportunity were given to lease these lands it would yield to the Indians some revenue. Therefore I did not make the point of order when the Senator from California offered the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. It is only for pasturage purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. It applies to lands for pasturage purposes only. So I think, unless some member of the Indian Committee makes objection, I shall not object to the consideration of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I rose to speak to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair waited for the Senator to see if he desired to speak on the amendment. Does the Senator desire to speak?

Mr. RAWLINS. I simply want to ask a question of the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. RAWLINS. If this amendment is adopted, will it again throw the question as to leasing mineral lands into conference?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not. This amendment provides for the leasing of the lands for pasturage purposes only.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not care to have this question formally opened, but I do want to say a word about it, if I may, informally.

I do not think this question has come before the Indian Committee at all. Therefore I was somewhat surprised when the amendment was presented. I do not know that there is anything objectionable in it, but the situation is this: We passed, in 1891, an act providing that where Indians had bought lands and had title to them, they might lease them, by action of the tribe, for agricultural purposes for a period not exceeding five years. That law, up to the present time, has applied only to lands which have been purchased and were owned by the Indians. This amendment proposes to take the lands, which I suppose Indians have not purchased and to which they have no title, in a case where there is an Executive order merely for their settlement upon them, and in this single instance provides for the leasing of those lands.

If this is proper to be done in a single instance, there is no reason that I can conceive of why it should not be done with reference to all the lands occupied by Indians under an Executive order. I do not know but it has been done in other instances; but what struck me about it was that here are some particular lands of Indians which are being occupied by Executive orders or authority, the leasing of which is asked for. I do not know that there is anything wrong about it, and, as I say, I do not wish to reconsider the action of the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not care to object to this amendment, but I wish to call attention to this fact: Here is an Executive order reserving a very large body of undoubtedly excellent grazing land. Under this provision it will be leased and will bring a large income; and when the people of that region want the Executive order reserving it vacated and the land opened to settlement and occupation for the people of this country, they will find this provision in the way of the ratification of any agreement for the opening up of that country. They will find these leases in existence and the parties interested in the leases, the cattlemen, fighting to prevent the opening of the country.

Just such a case occurred in connection with the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation. We made a treaty to open it, but we could not pass a bill for that purpose, because the land was leased to a lot of cattlemen, and they had influence enough to prevent the passage of the measure. Not only the cattlemen, but the philanthropic people of this country, the Indian Rights Association, oppose it because quite a large sum of money goes to the Indians from that source, and they fear that the supply will be cut off. I want to call attention to the fact that we will be confronted with this question within the next two or three years. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WHITE. This is merely an amendment, not in the interest alone of individuals who may own stock, but for the purpose of promoting the advantage of emaciated cattle and starving quadrupeds, who, gazing upon the fruitful supply of the Indian reservations, seek to replenish their wasted forms. [Laughter.] I can not understand why the philanthropists who are here present should object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I submit an amendment, which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the other members of the committee are entirely familiar with, and to which, I am sure, there will be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, at the bottom of page 112, the following:

UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the physiological action and nutritive value of alcohol and alcoholic beverages, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this matter was reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and as their report contains a history of the question involved in the amendment and it is a very interesting question, I desire to have that report printed in the RECORD, and also a letter from President D. C. Gilman, of the Johns Hopkins University.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The papers referred to are as follows:

There is a widespread public demand for more accurate information than we now have upon this subject. This demand comes from people actively engaged in temperance reform, from economists, clergymen, teachers, and from that large part of the people of the community who are earnestly considering the alcohol question in its varied aspects. A number of prominent men—economists, educators, clergymen, jurists, scientists, and business men, from different parts of the country, representing different shades of theological belief—Protestant, Catholic, and Jewish, and with naturally varying views upon political, social, and economic questions—have united in a non-partisan and public-spirited effort to obtain as accurate information as possible regarding the legislative, economic, physiological, and ethical aspects of the subject. They have instituted elaborate inquiries at their own private expense of time, labor, and money. With every advance in the inquiry its importance and usefulness have become more and more manifest. In some lines the investigation has outgrown the power of private individuals to conduct it. This was the case with investigations on the economic side.

The matter was brought to the attention of Congress, which authorized an investigation into this part of the subject by the Department of Labor. The project for this was approved in advance by the representatives both of temperance reform and the liquor interest. The outcome, as printed in the Twelfth Annual Report of the Department, has clearly demonstrated the usefulness of the investigation and is highly prized by all who are interested in the matter and have taken the pains to examine the data gathered and conclusions reached. The physiological aspects of the subject, including the food value of alcohol and alcoholic beverages, is of even more scientific and popular interest. A number of inquiries in this field have been undertaken by the committee above referred to. Experiments which bring the accurate and conclusive results so much desired are costly. Here, again, the enterprise has outgrown the means at the disposal of this philanthropic organization. It is therefore deemed proper to ask Congress to devote a small amount of the public funds to the gaining of this information, which will be of such large public utility and will meet so large a public demand.

It is proposed to intrust this sum to the Secretary of Agriculture because the inquiry is very closely related to the nutrition investigations which he is called upon by Congress to prosecute, and because the work can be done very economically in connection with those investigations. This arrangement will be the more advantageous because the Department of Agriculture will have at its disposal not only its own apparatus and appliances, but also means supplied by the committee named and from other sources for the purpose.

The investigation of the drink problem is one that has engaged the attention of scientists and philanthropists for a long time, resulting in the establishment, in the year 1893, of a committee of 50, composed of leading educators and scientists in all parts of the country, for the purpose of making investigations with a view, to use their own words, "of securing a body of facts which may serve as a basis for intelligent public and private action. It is the purpose of the committee to collect and collate impartially all accessible facts which bear upon the problem, and it is their hope to secure in the evidence thus accumulated a measure of confidence on the part of the community which is not granted to partisan statements."

It will be seen that this committee is simply an organization for research. As Mr. Charles Dudley Warner said in Harper's Magazine in February, 1897, "It was from the first understood that the prime business of the committee was not an expression of opinion or the advancing or advocacy of one theory or another, but strictly the investigation of facts, without reference to the conclusions to which they might lead." The committee entered upon an investigation of this great question without any help, financial or otherwise, except such as the members contributed, and in the investigations already undertaken they have spent a very considerable sum of money. They have now reached a point where they feel that the Government can properly render them a small amount of aid, and hence the reason for the introduction of the proposed amendment. It is believed that with a moderate amount of financial support results may be reached which will be of leading importance to the welfare of the country. As bearing on this question the following unsolicited letter from Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, will be of interest:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., January 13, 1899.

MY DEAR SIR: I was particularly gratified on taking up the RECORD this morning to see that you have submitted an amendment providing for the appropriation of $5,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the physiological action and nutritive value of alcohol and alcoholic beverages.

This Department has just published a report, in obedience to direction of Congress, on the economic aspects of the alcoholic liquor traffic. As no appropriation accompanied the authorization, I was obliged to limit the work to the means at my disposal. Notwithstanding this, the report brings out some very important information.

Now, an investigation upon the physiological action and nutritive values of alcohol and alcoholic beverages is one that would have far more general value than that relating to the economic aspects as brought out by our report, and such investigation should be made under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, as you provide, because it is closely allied to the food question, and for the further reason that the Secretary of Agriculture has a proper equipment for such work. I have had some conferences with Professor Atwater with reference to the proposed investigation. He has given you the main facts in the case, the necessity for such work, and what is being done by economists, educators, and others in a private capacity. To have their work, valuable and extensive as it is, supplemented by an official investigation along the lines proposed by you would be of the greatest value to the public. What the temperance question needs is scientific knowledge, and if the United States Government can aid in securing this in connection with the food problem, it seems to me the time and expense involved will meet with abundant compensation.

I have taken the liberty of addressing you in this matter because of the investigation already made by the Department of Labor and because, furthermore, I am thoroughly interested in seeing the temperance question discussed on scientific lines, and personally I am greatly pleased to see that you have interested yourself in the matter.

I am, sincerely, yours,

CARROLL D. WRIGHT,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate.

Impressed with the importance of the subject the amendment is reported back with a recommendation that it receive the favorable action of the Committee on Appropriations

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY, Baltimore, January 26, 1899.

DEAR MR. SENATOR: Allow me, as one of the committee of fifty, deeply interested in determining, by exact methods of inquiry, the physiological action and food value of alcohol, to thank you for your interest in the proposed addition to the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH's report is so exactly right and so persuasive that I trust its recommendation will be accepted by the Committee on Appropriations. Dr. Atwater, who will probably make the investigation, is particularly well qualified for the task.

I am, dear Mr. Senator, yours, very truly,

D. C. GILMAN.

Mr. HOAR. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I offer an amendment to come in on page 124, after line 14, which has been submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SECRETARY. On page 124, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

It shall be the duty of the commission appointed to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States to revise and codify the laws concerning the jurisdiction and practice of the courts of the United States, including the judiciary act and any amendment thereof and supplementary thereto, and all acts providing for the removal, appeal, and transfer of causes.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment requires unanimous consent; but I do not object to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 77, after line 13.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

For salaries and commissions of the register and the receiver of an additional land district, known as the Peavy land district, in the district of Alaska, $6,000: Provided, That the salary of said register and said receiver shall not be less than $1,500, and with fees and commissions not more than $3,000 a year each, until June, 1900, from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 33, after line 10. It is moved as a substitute for the one put in by the committee. It takes the place of the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Zoological Park," in line 10, page 33, it is proposed to strike out the committee amendment down to and including the word "Park," in line 18, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to grade, regulate, and curb the street on the west border of the Zoological Park from Woodley road to Cathedral avenue, as shown on the third-section plans (permanent system of highways), and Cathedral avenue from Connecticut avenue to Woodley road: Provided, That the full width of the road bordering the park be donated wherever it lies within the bounds of Woodley Park.

Authority is hereby conferred on the District Commissioners to use as a highway so much of the Zoological Park as lies within the proposed lines of said boundary road or street. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are further authorized to regulate the width of Woodley road in front of lot 1, block 1, of T. E. Waggaman's subdivision of Pretty Prospect to a uniform width of 60 feet, and to correct the records of the surveyor's office in accordance therewith.

To carry out the grading and regulating and curbing authorized above, $45,000 is hereby appropriated, one-half to be assessed against the abutting property, and one-half to be charged, in equal parts, to the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

For the purchase of land adjoining the Zoological Park on the east, to protect the bear pits, to be expended under the direction of the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan is in lieu of the committee amendment, which was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole. By unanimous consent this has been done. The Senator from Michigan suggested to me an amendment on page 32, to strike out "eighty," which was inserted, and that "seventy-five" be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment suggested in line 22, page 32, to strike out "eighty" and insert "seventy-five?" The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to offer an amendment. At the end of line 19, on page 86, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 19, on page 86, it is proposed to insert:

And the sum of $50,000 shall be used for the erection of barracks, quarters, gun sheds, and stables for one battery of light artillery at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say that this is intended to increase the efficiency of the post-graduate school at the post at Fort Leavenworth. It has been asked for by every commandant of that school. It has been approved by the War Department; it has been approved by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I believe the Senator in charge of the bill will not oppose it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, after the amendment adopted in line 19, it is proposed to insert:

And the sum of $50,000 shall be expended toward the construction of a military post at or near the town of Sheridan, Wyo., on lands now owned by the United States for said purpose, the cost of the same not to exceed $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I have another amendment, which will cost no money. It provides for some work to be done.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate through an Indian inspector with the Shoshone and Arapaho Indians for the relinquishment of their right and interest in and to a part of their reservation.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Interior has absolute authority to do that now. I see no necessity for the amendment, although I do not know that I have any objection to it unless the Committee on Military Affairs have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer an amendment, to come in after line 17, on page 97.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For one dental pathologist, $2,000.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I hope it may be adopted. I ask that it be inserted on page 5, between lines 11 and 12.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

For repairing the house in which Abraham Lincoln died, being the property of the United States, $3,833.50, the same to be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa to an amendment I am about to propose, which is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after line 22, on page 70, the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, from the funds in the Treasury belonging to the Choctaw Nation of Indians, outstanding warrants not exceeding in amount the sum of $75,000: Provided, That before any of said warrants are paid the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an investigation to be made to ascertain whether such warrants have been duly and legally issued, and are a valid and subsisting obligation of said nation; and payment of the same shall be made by some official or employee designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. One or two amendments have been omitted and I desire to move them. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 129, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Graham Glass for services rendered to the Hon. JOSEPH SIMON, a Senator from the State of Oregon, from the 8th day of October to the 4th day of December, 1898, from the appropriation for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and other employees in the service of the Senate for the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment and ask unanimous consent that it be agreed to. On page 30, after line 13, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, on page 30, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to deliver to Gen. W. W. Duffield, recently Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the stereotype plates of his work on logarithms and logarithmic tables to ten places of decimals, being Part I of Appendix 12, Report of Superintendent of Coast and Geodetic Survey for 1896, said plates being no longer of service to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 53, at the end of line 5.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Provided, That there shall be paid to the appraisers at the ports of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Baltimore $1,000 each per annum in addition to the compensation they now receive, to be paid from the permanent appropriations for the collection of customs.

Mr. SPOONER. I am authorized by the Committee on Rules to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Charles W. Johnson for preparing and indexing precedents and decisions on points of order and phraseology in the United States Senate and House of Representatives, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment that I send to the desk by authority of the Committee on Public Lands.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 19, page 63, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, when in his judgment the public interest or convenience requires, wholly cancel the location or modify the boundaries of any reservoir site located or selected under the act of October 2, 1888, entitled, "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof, relating to the selection or location of reservoir sites in the arid-land States and Territories.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, for the information of the committee and the conference committee which is to follow, I will state that the subject-matter to which this proposed amendment refers originated in a joint resolution approved March 20, 1888, entitled "A joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States, and to report to Congress." I will insert the joint resolution in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, for the purpose of having it accessible for ready reference.

[No. 7.] Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States, and to report to Congress.

Whereas a large portion of the unoccupied public lands of the United States is located within what is known as the arid region and now utilized only for grazing purposes, but much of which, by means of irrigation, may be rendered as fertile and productive as any land in the world, capable of supporting a large population, thereby adding to the national wealth and prosperity;

Whereas all the water flowing during the summer months in many of the streams of the Rocky Mountains, upon which chiefly the husbandman of the plains and the mountain valleys chiefly depends for moisture for his crops, has been appropriated and is used for the irrigation of lands contiguous thereto, whereby a comparatively small area has been reclaimed; and

Whereas there are many natural depressions near the sources and along the courses of these streams which may be converted into reservoirs for the storage of the surplus water which during the winter and spring seasons flows through the streams; from which reservoirs the water there stored can be drawn and conducted through properly constructed canals at the proper season, thus bringing large areas of land into cultivation and making desirable much of the public land for which there is now no demand: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Director of the Geological Survey, be, and he is hereby, directed to make an examination of that portion of the arid regions of the United States where agriculture is carried on by means of irrigation as to the natural advantages for the storage of water for irrigating purposes with the practicability of constructing reservoirs, together with the capacity of the streams and the cost of construction and capacity of reservoirs, and such other facts as bear on the question of storage of water for irrigating purposes; and that he be further directed to report to Congress as soon as practicable the result of such investigation.

The next appearance of the subject in the records of Congress appears in the sundry civil appropriation act approved October 2, 1888, found on page 529 of volume 25 of the Statutes at Large:

For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation, and the segregation of the irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and the prevention of floods and overflows, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employees in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, the work to be performed by the Geological Survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

And the Director of the Geological Survey, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall make a report to Congress on the first Monday in December of each year, showing in detail how the said money has been expended, the amount used for actual survey and engineer work in the field in locating sites for reservoirs, and an itemized account of the expenditures under this appropriation.

And all the lands which may hereafter be designated or selected by such United States surveys for sites for reservoirs, ditches, or canals for irrigation purposes and all the lands made susceptible of irrigation by such reservoirs, ditches, or canals are from this time henceforth hereby reserved from sale as the property of the United States, and shall not be subject after the passage of this act to entry, settlement, or occupation until further provided by law: Provided, That the President may at any time in his discretion by proclamation open any portion or all of the lands reserved by this provision to settlement under the homestead laws. (An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, approved October 2, 1888.)

It was there provided that the lands embraced in the selected reservoir sites might be withdrawn from public entry.

In 1890 a similar provision was made for the continuance of the work:

Irrigation survey: For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation and the segregation of irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and for ascertaining the cost thereof, and the prevention of floods and overflows, and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employees in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, the work to be performed by the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available; and the Director of the Geological Survey, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall make a report to Congress on the first Monday in December of each year, showing in detail how the said money has been expended, the amount used for actual survey and engineer work in the field in locating sites for reservoirs, and an itemized account of the expenditures under this and any future appropriation. (An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1890.)

In the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, found in 26 Statutes at Large, page 371, occurs the provision of law which is obnoxious and is reached by this amendment. I will incorporate that portion of the law relating to the subject-matter as a part of my remarks.

So much of the act of October 2, 1888, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," as provides for the withdrawal of the public lands from entry, occupation, and settlement, is hereby repealed, and all entries made or claims initiated in good faith and valid but for said act shall be recognized and may be perfected in the same manner as if said law had not been enacted, except that reservoir sites heretofore located or selected shall remain segregated and reserved from entry or settlement as provided by said act, until otherwise provided by law, and reservoir sites hereafter located or selected on public lands shall in like manner be reserved from the date of the location or selection thereof. (An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes, approved August 30, 1890.)

The difficulty encountered under this condition of law is that these reservoir sites were laid out on paper and appear on the public records, but were nowhere surveyed upon the ground.

They are generally described by metes and bounds and by reference to natural objects and permanent monuments. No work has ever been done upon them of any kind, character, or description. We find in the Western country that ordinary roads can not be extended across these alleged reservoir sites any more than they can across Indian or military reservations. The amendment contemplates permitting the Secretary of the Interior, where, in his judgment, the public interest will be promoted or the public convenience requires, to modify the boundaries of such reservoir sites or to cancel a site altogether, if, in his judgment, it is best for the public interest so to do.

I do not desire to make any further observations on the subject or to extend the debate, but I will insert in my remarks, with the consent of the Senate, the entire legislation on this subject, which is quite brief indeed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to make inquiry of the Senator from Montana, who is familiar with the entire legislation with respect to reservoirs, forest reservations, etc. It is whether or not these reservoirs have in any way been segregated on the surface from other lands?

Mr. CARTER. They have not, except by general reference in a very carelessly drawn description in each case.

Mr. ALLISON. By statute?

Mr. CARTER. By means of a general description furnished by the Geological Survey under authority of law.

Mr. ALLISON. To registers and receivers of land offices, or the surveyor-general, or to whom?

Mr. CARTER. These reservoir sites have been segregated by a report made to the Secretary of the Interior, and by him transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, thus withdrawing the lands from public settlement, and prohibiting any invasion of the sites for any purpose, public or private.

Mr. ALLISON. They are segregations on paper.

Mr. CARTER. On paper.

Mr. ALLISON. With copies in the several land offices.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to interfere with a matter of this character or make any suggestions respecting it, as it affects especially lands in the mountain States, but is there not some danger that if those reservoirs which have been thus segregated are now abandoned they will be occupied and taken by private persons, thus making it impossible for the Government in the future to secure such reservations?

Mr. CARTER. I have had in mind the possibility of some such result as the Senator suggests. It will be found in the act of Congress to which I last referred, the appropriation act of 1890, that these reservoir sites were rendered subject to location and entry under the general land laws of the United States, but except as taken for claims under the general land laws they are otherwise to be held as segregated from the public domain.

Now, the difficulty we encounter is, that we can not extend a public road across one of these alleged reservoir sites. There is not a stake in existence; there is not a monument or description to designate the boundaries; and in a particular case I have in mind, where a road was stopped in its construction, the reservoir site was near the summit of a mountain and there was no possibility of ever getting any water into it unless by pumping the water up the mountain side.

This amendment contemplates permitting the Secretary of the Interior to modify the boundaries of the reservation, if you please, so as to permit a wagon road to pass over it, or a railroad, an irrigating canal, or any like public or semipublic improvement.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator from Iowa will make no objection to this amendment.

Mr. CARTER. There can not be any objection to the amendment. No reservoir site will be interfered with under the amendment unless for the public good as viewed by the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. I am trying to understand the amendment. I am not objecting to it. In some bills there are propositions for the Government of the United States to enter upon a wide scheme of irrigation; and, again, that the lands to be irrigated are to be donated to the States. If we are to enter upon an irrigation scheme on the part of the United States, we ought to have a place to hold the water. I merely wish to protect the general interest of the plans of our friends who have this irrigation matter so near at heart.

Mr. STEWART. The objection was that they segregated all the lands to hold the water and did not leave any to be cultivated.

Mr. CARTER. I will suggest that in the State of Montana they took almost an entire county as a reservoir site, and that county is about as large as the State of Maryland. There was hardly any land left to be irrigated.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 7.

Mr. ALLISON. At this point, if the Senator from North Dakota will withhold his proposed amendment for a moment, I think it is wise that we should have some understanding with respect to an evening session. I regard an evening session as necessary, in view of the public-bill business, and therefore I now move that at half past 5 o'clock a recess be taken until 8 o'clock.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether, if he drives us under whip and spur in this way and we should get through with the public business before Saturday at noon, we are to have some of the legislative corpses that have been laid away or have thought were dead brought to life here in the expiring hours? In other words, if we are to press onward now at this gait, without any obstruction whatever, with no disposition to do anything but to facilitate the passage of necessary bills, are we to have brought in other matters that would cause difference of opinion, argument, and all that kind of thing?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not. I hope nothing will be brought forward that will not meet the approval of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not whether it meets the approval of the Senator from South Carolina or not. There are a good many matters—for instance, the subsidy shipping bill, the anti-scalping bill, the armor-plate business in the naval appropriation bill, and all that sort of thing, which will undoubtedly consume a good deal of time if they are insisted on.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to withhold the ceremonies until the corpses are brought in.

Mr. TILLMAN. We are not having any ceremonies on them. I am simply making an inquiry of the Senator who is acknowledged to be the leader on the other side and almost the leader of the Senate. We all respect and admire him, and we know his purpose, and the question is whether if we facilitate that purpose we are to be punished for it afterwards by having an unnecessary fight over something that can not pass.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his compliment to me. I will say to him that he himself has mentioned one reason why we should have a session to-night. He has given notice that there is to be a debate here upon what we call armor plate. I have no doubt the Senator from South Carolina will illuminate that subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. It may cause debate, depending upon the action of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, if these appropriation bills are to be considered, they must be pushed forward with reasonable rapidity consistent with careful and thorough consideration, and therefore it is necessary that certain matters should be done to-night. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] made a conference report, which will undoubtedly take some time. It seems to me a night session is necessary. We may be able to adjourn early.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not object and I do not propose to object. I will not do anything to obstruct business. I simply want a quiet understanding among ourselves that if we are to facilitate these necessary measures at all, those which will excite bitter controversy had better be let alone for the balance of the session.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that we can easily have such an understanding, and a public one as well.

Mr. HOAR. I think there ought to be a brief executive session this afternoon. There is the appointment of several judges on the table not acted upon.

Mr. ALLISON. If we can arrange for the business of the day and evening, I see no objection to having a brief executive session, or even an executive session more prolonged—for half an hour.

Mr. HOAR. Would it be convenient now?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that it be taken at 5 o'clock, or half past 4, so that we can continue until the recess in executive session if necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate take a recess from half past 5 until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I give notice that at half past 4 I shall move an executive session unless there be something very peculiar in the business of the session at that time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 22, insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to detail an inspector who shall negotiate with the Devils Lake band of Sioux Indians in North Dakota for the cession and relinquishment to the United States of whatever right or interest they may have in and to any and all land in said State to which they claim title, and for the purpose of fixing the boundaries of said reservation and of disposing of the surplus or unallotted lands of said tribes, subject to the approval of Congress. Said inspector shall also report to the Secretary of the Interior the number of the said Sioux Indians and the number of mixed-bloods, if any, who are entitled to consideration by the United States Government.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This amendment carries no appropriation, and it is identical with the amendment already adopted, offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to offer another amendment. On page 67, line 19, I move to strike out the word "six" and insert "ten."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, page 67, before the word "thousand," strike out "six" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

For necessary expenses of survey, appraisal, and sale of abandoned military reservations transferred to the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and any law prior thereto, including a custodian of the ruin of Casa Grande, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment. I move to insert, after the word "Congress," in line 3, page 115:

For the construction and equipment of a repair steamer and for spare cable, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he will allow me to call up the conference report that I made a short time since on the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that to be rather a lengthy report and an important one, and I will yield.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. I ask that it be printed, and I give notice that I shall call up the bill early to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be printed under the rule.
Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. Mr. CAFFERY submitted the report of the minority of the Committee on Education and Labor on the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

BOWMAN ACT AND OTHER CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4938) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it will be necessary to read the bill in full, item by item, because there was but one amendment which consisted of a large number of items. The amendment has been read in the Senate, but not since we reported it before. I do not think it will be necessary to read it. There are no new items in it. I will make a statement of the report, and I believe this will avoid the necessity of reading again the items; I think I can give the information.

The House sent us a bill containing the judgments of the Court of Claims upon what are known as the Bowman and Tucker claims, amounting to $1,189,515.55. The Senate had been instructed by an item in the general deficiency appropriation bill of 1897 to make a general bill, and to put into that bill a number of items that had passed the Senate, also the House, from time to time. We took the bill, which was reported to the Senate entire, and made it an amendment on the House bill.

The bill as it passed the Senate carried an appropriation of $9,030,000. The House did not accept our amendment and the bill went into conference. The Senate amendment contained $377,964.74 of Tucker and Bowman claims that had come from the court after the House bill had been prepared. The Senate also added to that bill an item of $1,055,473 as French spoliation claims, and then added quite a large number of miscellaneous claims, bringing the amount up, as I said, to $9,000,000 and upward.

After a large number of conferences, lasting pretty nearly through the whole session so far, we report a bill that carries $3,100,768.38. The bill as is now proposed contains every provision that came in the House bill. All the items in the House bill are left in. They were Court of Claims cases. It contains $377,964 of Tucker and Bowman claims added by the Senate. So, up to the time the Senate bill was passed, there are no Bowman and Tucker cases from the courts that are not provided for in this bill. The French spoliation claims, all that had come from the court up to that time, are in this bill.

In order to bring the bill down to what the members of the House thought was a bill of a character that they could properly ask the House to pass, we were compelled to reduce the $9,000,000 to $3,000,000, or in that neighborhood, and in doing so we left out a great number of cases that we all agreed were meritorious. I say that, because I do not want it to be understood that the committee intended to cast any reflection on a great number of these cases, but we determined in order to get an agreement upon the bill to make a rule that we would not put in the bill any claim unless it had passed either the House or the Senate and had had a favorable report from the House that it had not passed. I wish to say that some of the cases here have had at least six or eight reports, and some of them have had nearly that number from both Houses. The bill, then, carries Tucker and Bowman claims of about $1,500,000, over a million for French spoliations, and $482,802 of miscellaneous claims.

There are a large number of claims known as the Selfridge board cases for ships. We struck out one case that was known as the Roach case because it was objected to and because it was said that there had been a bill or two passed at this Congress for the relief of that concern and we ought not to pass too many at once.

Then we took the balance of the cases, and after consulting with those who represented the claimants we made a horizontal reduction of 20 per cent. The House insisted upon that or else that they all should go out. We eliminated all the church and school cases.

In addition to the claims I have mentioned, the bill carried originally a large amount for State claims against the Government for money expended during the war of the rebellion, in Indian wars, etc., California having a claim of almost $4,000,000. We found it impossible to secure the approval of the conferees on the part of the House that those claims should remain in the bill. Oregon had a claim for about $335,000. Nevada had a claim in the neighborhood of that amount.

Mr. STEWART. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. TELLER. Four hundred thousand dollars. And Florida had a small claim of a few thousand, and Wyoming one of eight or nine thousand dollars. The House conferees would not allow the State claims to be in. The Oregon case has gone to the Court of Claims, and is there pending.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado concerning the claim of the State of California for supplies furnished troops and manning and equipping them during the civil war from 1861 to 1865, amounting to some three million nine hundred and odd thousand dollars, which has been favorably reported upon during five different Congresses, I think, which has been passed in three different Congresses, and which was placed upon this omnibus bill, so called, unanimously by the Senate. Did the conferees on the part of the Senate recede from that amendment also; and if so, what is its status to-day?

I incidentally learned a few minutes since that the claim of the State of Nevada had been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for report. If the committee desire further light upon the California claim, we are willing again to place it under the Roentgen rays of investigation, but really we do not want to wait as long as the French spoliation claims have waited to have them adjudicated. If the Nevada claims have been referred to the Treasury Department, I would ask the Senator from Colorado if our claims can not also follow in that same path.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator that I have examined the California cases somewhat. As he states, it had a most thorough examination at the hands of the committees of both Houses, and I do not believe it needs any further examination. It is one of those claims that ought to be paid, and at the next session we shall be able, I think, without seeking any further light on the subject, to pay the claim.

Mr. PERKINS. In view of the fact that a part of those claims have been referred to the Treasury Department, I do not want the opportunity to pass of adding any further respectability to our claim, if it will do so, by having it follow the course of other State claims.

Mr. TELLER. There were objections made to the Nevada case, and it was thought best that it should go to the Department for further examination. I do not think the Senator need press this matter at all. I do not think it would expedite the claim. I think he had better leave it as it is.

Mr. PERKINS. I will defer to your judgment.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say to the Senator that even the conferees on the part of the House were not unfriendly to his claim, but they felt that we were getting too big a bill. That is the plain English.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I believe the Senator from Colorado and the conferees upon the part of the Senate have done their very best in this matter. I feel that an allowance of these claims should have been made—

Mr. TELLER. So do I.

Mr. WHITE. I am satisfied that the conferees on the part of the House are likeminded. But it was impossible, in view of the characteristics of the entire measure, to do more than they have done.

Referring to the French spoliation claims, I have only this remark to make. There was an element of mercy about that situation, because everyone connected with the subject had died. So when the final refutation of the claims arrived there were no sufferers. Possibly we may be ultimately included in that pleasant category.

Mr. PASCO. By the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I wish to say that the California State claim was not the only meritorious State claim which was omitted from the bill, and it was only because of the absolute impossibility of procuring the recognition of this class of claims in this bill that the Senate conferees at last yielded. Otherwise the whole bill would have failed, for the House conferees felt compelled to carry out the views of their friends in that body, and upon their continued insistence the State claims were left out. There was in the bill an important claim in which the State of Florida was interested upon which a favorable agreement should have been reached, but that and other claims have been postponed to the future, and we have every reason to believe that when they are reached in the next Congress the efforts to secure their settlement will be successful.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Are all the State claims eliminated from the bill?

Mr. TELLER. All of the State claims are eliminated. Even those that could not be questioned in the slightest degree had to be eliminated.

Mr. SPOONER. There are only claims of individuals that remain in the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Individual claims.

Mr. SPOONER. The French spoliation claims remain in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. They are individual claims, and remain in the bill just as they came from the court, without any change.

Mr. SPOONER. Are any claims in the bill which Congress has barred by the statute of limitations?

Mr. TELLER. No; I think not. I do not recall any of that character.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that there is practically no item in the bill that can be controverted from any standpoint whatever.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to know whether the bills that have been considered by the committee and the items known as claims are now all finally adjudicated, or are we to have them, as we have had them heretofore, upon appropriation bills and upon our Calendars as separate and individual claims? Is the matter now so adjusted as that we shall have a statute of limitations running against them?

Mr. SPOONER. Like the poor, we always have them with us.

Mr. STEWART. There is no statute of limitations against those left out.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, I would not attempt to exclude the claim of the State of Nevada.

Mr. TELLER. I believe the great number eliminated from this bill will be eventually paid. They are just and righteous claims, and ought to be paid, and will be paid. We get rid of a great number of claims because the Bowman Act claims consist of very many small claims spread throughout the country. For instance, I will take the State of Kentucky. There are two and a half or three pages of Kentucky items, all small; and so on through other States. We thought it was best to get what we could on this bill and let the rest wait for further consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator state the aggregate of the claims?

Mr. TELLER. Three million one hundred thousand dollars, all told.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the aggregate of the French spoliation claims?

Mr. TELLER. The French spoliation claims which had been reported—and those are all that ever will be reported—amount to $1,035,473.

Mr. SPOONER. Does this include any of the Southern war claims?

Mr. TELLER. The Southern war claims, or Bowman and Tucker claims, amount to $1,547,480.29, and are largely distributed over the country in small items. I wish to say that the pressure upon the committee to allow these claims to become a law was simply immense. We were appealed to by people who have had these claims, who have waited for them for many years and believed they were just, and who were in great financial distress. The committee felt that while we were right in putting upon the bill the original number we did, it would hardly be fair to those people to allow the session to pass without the passage of some relief.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether the Overton Hotel Company claim is embraced in this bill?

Mr. TELLER. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, we can not hear what Senators are saying.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Indiana asked me if there is a claim in the bill called the Overton claim. It is in the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will say to the Senator, if that claim is included in the bill, I shall object to the report. I do not think the claim should be paid under any fair rule, and if you can not separate it from the other claims, I shall have to object to the report.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that that is a case which has had the adjudication of the court; and it has had the adjudication of the Senate and of the House several times. It is a provision in the bill that the Senate conferees had no control over, because it was insisted upon by our associates in the House. We were not at liberty to leave that out. I suggested, because I knew the opposition of the Senator from Indiana, that it should be left out; but we were not able to do it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That claim is substantially this. It is true it has been to the Court of Claims under a resolution passed by the Senate some years ago. That resolution directed the Court of Claims to determine the question as to the loyalty of the Overton Hotel Company, and the company by an adjudication of the court was held to be loyal. It does seem to me that the resolution of the Senate was not broad enough; that the question should have been determined whether the stockholders of the corporation were loyal or disloyal. It seems to me that the question which should have been submitted to the court and have been decided by it was this: Were the stockholders, those for whose direct benefit the money is to be appropriated, loyal?

From my investigation the stockholders of the Overton Hotel Company were absolutely disloyal during the war. The fact is attested over and over again and beyond question by the records of the War Department. And I therefore, Mr. President, protest against the allowance of this claim. It is a very large one, amounting, as I recollect, to something like $52,000.

Mr. TELLER. Fifty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Fifty-three thousand dollars, as the Senator from Colorado says. The Senator was aware of my objection to the claim, and I am glad to know he has urged the objection in the conference committee. I do not think that there is any ground upon which an allowance of this claim can be justified.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that I differ from the Senator from Indiana on that proposition. I think it is a claim that can be supported, that has been supported by the committees of this body and of the other repeatedly. I want to say to him that, not wishing to get into any controverted question, I would have gladly left that claim out if I could, but you can not always do in a conference committee what you want to do.

I do not think because there may be some question raised by the Senator that it ought to jeopardize this bill, and I trust it will not. I think it is one of those cases in which there might be a difference of opinion, and yet, if it had been committed to me, I should have reported it again as it has been reported heretofore by very eminent members of this body.

Mr. President, every item in this bill has been read once, and most of the items have been twice read to the Senate. If the Senate thinks it necessary that they should be read again, it can be; but I ask that we may adopt the conference report and send it to the other House, as the committee in that body are very anxious we should hurry it over there so that it may be finally disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred a certified copy of the report of the committee appointed by the senate of the State of Ohio, pursuant to senate resolution No. 21, to investigate the charges of bribery in the election of Hon. MARCUS A. HANNA to the Senate of the United States, to submit a written report. The conclusion of the committee is not to ask the Senate for authority and direction to take further testimony, but to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the report of the State senate of Ohio. I ask that the report may be printed and laid upon the table.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] desires to make a minority report.

Mr. TURLEY. On behalf of the three members of the committee whose names are signed to the report which I submit I present a minority report, in which we find that there should be further inquiry and investigation. I ask that the views of the minority may also be printed and laid upon the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let them be printed with the majority report.

Mr. TURLEY. Yes; printed with the majority report. The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] also desires to present a report in his own behalf.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not join either the majority or the minority in their reports. I submit the following report for myself:

In view of the fact that this Congress will expire within the next three days and that the term of service of Mr. HANNA will expire with it, it is apparent that there is not time within which to consider the case, and it will perforce of circumstances fall with the close of the session. My term of office expires with this Congress, and I do not under such circumstances deem it wise to express an opinion as to what a future Congress should do to which Mr. HANNA has been elected.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] will be printed in connection with the other reports, in the absence of objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. QUAY. There are four or five public-building bills, which came from the House of Representatives, on the table of the Vice-President. I should be glad to have them laid before the Senate and have a vote upon concurring in the House amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1036) to provide for a public building at Cleveland, Ohio; which were, on page 1, line 16, after the word "service," to insert "Weather Bureau;" and on page 2, line 23, to strike out the word "five" and insert "two."

Mr. QUAY. I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from Ohio to this bill. Unless there are objections, I will move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Pennsylvania makes inquiry in regard to the Cleveland post-office building?

Mr. QUAY. Yes; the bill for that building is now before the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives. I move concurrence.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HANNA subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HANNA. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILKESBARRE, PA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1271) for a public building at the city of Wilkesbarre, Pa., and appropriating money therefor, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "cause to be erected thereon, a" and insert "to contract for the erection and completion thereon of a;" on page 1, line 12, to strike out "two" and insert "one;" on page 2, line 22, to strike out all after "alleys" down to and including the word "therein," in line 29; and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill for a public building at the city of Wilkesbarre, Pa."

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TOPEKA, KANS.

The bill (H. R. 4076) for enlarging the public building at Topeka, Kans., was read twice by its title.

Mr. BAKER. The House has passed this bill, and it is precisely similar to a bill which was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAKER. I move that the Senate bill on the same subject, being the bill (S. 5321) for enlarging the public building at Topeka, Kans., be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNEX TO FEDERAL BUILDING AT JACKSON, MISS.

The bill (H. R. 5536) providing for an annex to the Federal building at Jackson, Miss., was read twice by its title.

Mr. MONEY. I ask consent to have that bill put upon its passage. An exactly similar bill has been reported favorably by the Senate committee. The annex provided for in the bill is very much needed, and I hope there will be no objection to considering the bill at this time. It will take but a moment.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. ALLISON. I think, respecting the public-building bills which have passed the House of Representatives, they should all be treated practically upon the same plane.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to make the same statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator for making that suggestion. These bills have been maturely considered in both Houses.

Mr. CULLOM. Most of them were introduced here in exactly the same terms in which they have passed the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly. If they are to be availed of, so far as sufficient appropriations are concerned, of course the appropriations must be made upon the sundry civil bill now pending. Therefore, I hope that whatever course may be adopted as to any one of these bills, it may be followed as to all of them in so far as they have received the consideration of the Senate.

I now ask unanimous consent that House bill 484, in relation to the public building in Dubuque, Iowa, may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I arose to make the same suggestion about the public building at Fitchburg, Mass. That bill has not only passed the House of Representatives, but it is exactly alike in every syllable with the bill which has been reported by the Senate committee. I desire to have that put upon its passage after the bill of the Senator from Iowa shall have been considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 484) providing for the erection of an addition to the United States custom-house and post-office building in the city of Dubuque, Iowa; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know what became of the bill for a public building at Lawrence, Mass., which came from the other House and has not been laid before the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest that we take up the bills in their order, and then we shall be able to consider them all.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; let us consider them regularly.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I suggest that we follow that course and take up the public-building bills in regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that course will be followed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRUNSWICK, GA.

Mr. CLAY. I ask that the bill for a public building at Brunswick, Ga., may now be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall proceed in regular order.

Mr. CLAY. I will state that this is the next bill in order, according to my understanding. This bill has passed the House of Representatives, and the Senate committee unanimously reported a similar Senate bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 447) for the erection of a custom-house and post-office building at Brunswick, Ga.; which was read twice by its title.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to make a suggestion in connection with this matter. There are bills providing for public buildings which have passed this body, bills which are supported by the necessities of the case, and which have not been acted upon by the House of Representatives. Now, if we are to adopt a rule whereby a bill which has passed the House of Representatives is to be attached to the sundry civil bill, and other bills equally meritorious, and in some cases more decidedly so, are to be ignored, it is a very serious matter and places Senators on this floor in a very dubious attitude.

While I shall not object to any favor that the Senate may see fit to accord any locality in this direction, I do not hesitate to say that I think this body ought to do something to preserve its status and assert its rights in regard to the matter to which I have alluded. I know of several bills which have passed this body that are tied up elsewhere for reasons which have not found their justification in any expressed view.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT BALTIMORE, MD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 710) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., and for the erection of a new public building thereon for the accommodation of the Government service in said city.

A bill (H. R. 2598) for the erection of a public building at Newport, Vt.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11688) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEW IBERIA, LA.

Mr. McENERY. I should like to call up House bill 11314, which has just been received from the House of Representatives. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill (H. R. 11314) to provide for a public building at New Iberia, La., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making a little explanation. Yesterday I was absent from the Chamber on account of illness, and was paired, as I thought, upon the Army bill; at least, I sent instructions to the Senate to be paired upon that question. Had I been present at that time, I should have voted in favor of the Army bill as it passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 196.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Delaware give way? I understand that the Chair has other matters to lay before the Senate, bills which have passed the House. Will not the Senator give way until the bills which have passed the House have been laid before the Senate?

Mr. KENNEY. It will not take a moment to pass the joint resolution. It is very short. However, I will give way.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEWPORT, VT.

The bill (H. R. 2598) for the erection of a public building at Newport, Vt., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ROME, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 1631) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rome, in the State of New York, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the Senator from New York that this bill may be acted upon.

The bill was read the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EAU CLAIRE, WIS.

The bill (H. R. 477) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at the city of Eau Claire, in the State of Wisconsin, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MACON, GA.

The bill (H. R. 10753) to provide for enlarging and improving the United States Government building at Macon, Ga., and to appropriate $58,000 therefor, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, GA.

The bill (H. R. 1079) to enlarge and improve the United States public building at Columbus, Ga., was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. W. BOOTES.

Mr. KENNEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 196) for the relief of J. T. Bootes, late lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, James Thomas Bootes as a lieutenant (junior grade) in the regular establishment of the United States Navy, to take rank at the foot of his original class, next after Lieut. (Junior Grade) Robert E. Coontz, Bootes having been honorably discharged by operation of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1882. But he shall not receive pay for the time while out of the naval service.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let the sundry civil appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the consideration of an amendment. I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site in the city of Selma, in Dallas County, in the State of Alabama, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, ventilating and heating apparatus, elevators and approaches, and fences, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, the cost of said building, including said vaults, ventilating and heating apparatus, elevators, approaches, and fences, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purposes aforesaid.

SEC. — That the money hereby appropriated shall not be used for the purposes aforesaid until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Alabama shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over said site, during the time the United States shall be the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein; and the said building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side thereof, including streets and alleys.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Alabama if this is one of the bills that have been considered by both Houses?

Mr. PETTUS. No, sir; it is not, but it is strictly in accordance with the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, sir. It is strictly in accordance with Rule XVI. If the Chair will refer to Rule XVI, it prohibits an amendment of a certain sort "unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session." This bill has been passed here in the Senate at the present session.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw his amendment for the time being. As the rule has always been construed, public-building bills are regarded as general legislation not admissible upon the sundry civil bill until they have passed both Houses.

Mr. PETTUS. I was informed by one of the oldest members of the Senate that the word "act" here was considered to be a bill which had passed the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been uniformly construed, as respects public-building bills, that they were not in order on the sundry civil bill, being general legislation in contemplation of that rule, until they had passed both Houses.

Mr. PETTUS. I will inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what he means by the "present?" He asked me to withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I only meant that there are some other amendments which I should like to have considered. Later on this question will be considered, perhaps more at large, when we come to other public buildings for which bills have passed both Houses.

Mr. PETTUS. If it means an indefinite postponement, I can not agree to it. If it means that the Senator has some reason why he does not want to consider it now, that is a different thing.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not mean an indefinite postponement, nor does it quite mean that I shall not object to it later if I can object.

Mr. PETTUS. I did not understand the Senator's last remark. Oh, let us deal perpendicularly with each other. Do you want to have the amendment considered now or after a while?

Mr. ALLISON. I prefer that it shall be considered later, if the Senator will allow me, because if it is pressed now I shall be obliged to invoke the rule, whatever it is.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator wants to consider it later, I have no objection at all to that course.

Mr. ALLISON. There were some omitted amendments which I ask may be considered now. I wish to go back to the amendment on page 57.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 57, the committee proposed to insert:

That portion of the rooms and space recently occupied by the Library of Congress in the Capitol building north of a line drawn east and west through the center of the Rotunda shall be used for such purpose as may hereafter be designated by the Senate of the United States; and that portion of such rooms and space south of said line shall be used for such purpose as may hereafter be designated by the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. The intention of this amendment is to utilize the space recently occupied by the Congressional Library, assigning one-half the space to the House of Representatives and the remaining half to the Senate of the United States. If that amendment has been agreed to, I offer, to come in after line 10, another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been agreed to. The Senator from Iowa presents an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, on page 57, insert:

For the preparation and construction of convenient committee rooms for the use of Senate committees in that portion of the old Congressional Library herein assigned to the Senate, the work to be done by the Architect of the Capitol under the direction of the Committee on Rules of the Senate, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The next amendment passed over is on page 82.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 11, the committee proposed to strike out all of the bill down to and including line 22, in the following words:

One-half of the foregoing sums under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Of the whole amount appropriated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1900, under the title "Public buildings and grounds," the sum of $22,419 shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the remainder from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the pending amendment ought to be adopted. The clause proposed to be stricken out was put into the bill by the House, I believe, without objection. It seems to me it is a very useful and a very appropriate provision in the bill.

I do not intend in this connection to go into the general question of the division of the expenses connected with the administration of affairs in this District. It is an old question and I recognize the fact that to some extent it has grown threadbare. The view which has prevailed in regard to that matter has never met my individual approbation.

Whenever the matter comes up it is always said that the people of the United States should take great pride in our capital city, and that the amount of the tax which is levied upon the General Treasury amounts to very little to each Congressional district or each particular person in the United States.

But I have never been able to see why there should be any distinction between the obligation which is taken by State governments in State capitals and the obligations which should belong to the Federal Government in the Federal capital. I presume the capitol building and the other State property belonging to Texas located in our capital city would almost equal in value all the private property within the city limits. It is very probable that the same condition of affairs exists in the capital of the State of the Senator from Iowa. Yet I have never heard it proposed that the State of Texas should bear any part of the local expenses incident to the civil administration of the city of Austin, in which our capital is located.

Of course, it is but to restate a very old proposition in connection with this general subject to say that but for the capital of the Union being located here the Washington people would not have valuable property upon which to pay taxes, and that daily, monthly, yearly, the situation of the national capital here enhances the value of all the private property in this city and enables its owners to make large returns upon their investment. I believe it is also generally agreed that the taxation in this city is far less than it is in any other municipality in the United States of equal population.

However, it is not my purpose to urge at this particular juncture an argument against the payment by the General Government of some part of the local expenses.

I am endeavoring now to apply the fixed rule of 50 per cent division to the maintenance of the parks, reservations, and like city conveniences. In the general act of 1878 it was provided that the Federal Treasury should bear one-half of the main local expenses. Now it is proposed to strike out a provision which levies upon the revenues of the District one-half of certain expenses which I have named. Why should we get out of line with the idea dominating the act of 1878?

Let us examine the expenses referred to somewhat in detail. Turning to page 80 of the bill it will be observed that the heading is "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington."

For the improvement and care of public grounds, as follows:

Now—

For improvement and maintenance of grounds south of the Executive Mansion, $4,000.

Then going on:

For ordinary care of Lafayette Park, Franklin Park, Lincoln Park, the Monument grounds, reservation numbered 17, and site of old canal northwest of same, $3,000.

Post and chain fences, high iron fences, etc., on various reservations, $20,000. Smithsonian Grounds, $2,500. There are other similar items, but it is unnecessary to read them. At the end of the enumeration we find this clause:

One-half of the foregoing sums under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Bear in mind that these sums all refer to the expense of maintaining parks, reservations, etc., outside of the Executive grounds, Capitol grounds, and other property used mainly or substantially for national purposes.

You will find on page 84 another clause relating to the same general subject. On page 85 there is another for electric lights in the different parks, and on page 98 you will find another:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, $19,000.

On page 112 I believe you will find another.

Mr. ALLISON. Pages 84, 85, 97, and 98.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; those are the ones I read.

The second clause, which is proposed to be stricken out, on page 82, reads:

Of the whole amount appropriated in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1900 under the title "Public buildings and grounds" the sum of $22,410 shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the remainder from the Treasury of the United States.

The amounts which are referred to in that second clause of this page relate to watchmen, as follows:

One in Franklin Park; one in Lafayette Park; two in Smithsonian Grounds; one in Judiciary Park; one in Lincoln Park and adjacent reservations; one at Iowa Circle—

Mr. ALLISON. On what page?

Mr. CHILTON. On page 30 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, these are expenses which it is proposed that the District of Columbia shall bear in a proportion of one-half only. I will continue the enumeration:

One at Thomas Circle and neighboring reservations; one at Washington Circle and neighboring reservations; one at Dupont Circle and neighboring reservations; one at McPherson and Farragut parks; one at Stanton Park and neighboring reservations; two at Henry and Seaton parks and reservations east of Botanic Garden; one at Mount Vernon Park and adjacent reservations, etc.

Now, adopt the committee amendment and the property of the District will reap all the benefits of these conveniences without any corresponding burden.

I submit to the sense of fairness of the Senate that it is hardly proper that the whole expense of maintaining these watchmen and maintaining these parks should be saddled upon the general Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. Only a word, Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Texas, by way of suggestion.

The adjustment as between the amounts to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States was made in 1878, and from that time until the present the expenditures which are mentioned in the various paragraphs under the heading of "Public buildings and grounds" have been paid wholly by the United States. This is the first appropriation bill in which it is provided that one-half of these sums shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

A large portion of the expenses here provided for are expenses practically about the Executive Mansion and the War, State, and Navy Department building. They have never been considered as being within the adjustment of 1878, and, as Senators will see, it is in the nature of an anomaly for this provision to be inserted here.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill passed the House of Representatives with the items just now enumerated by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] without the insertion of this clause, and it passed the Senate without the insertion of this clause at this session, and almost before this bill had received the approval of the President we find here a provision coming from the House of Representatives requiring that one-half of the expenses which were provided for and charged to the Government of the United States on these Government reservations shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia. That shows on its face that the question has long since been settled as to how these appropriations shall be divided when applied to the public reservations in this city.

For example, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act many of the watchmen spoken of are employed about the Smithsonian grounds and about the public places which have no relation to or connection with the general appropriations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is it not a fact that the District government has no control or jurisdiction whatever over these parks or reservations?

Mr. ALLISON. It has none whatever.

Mr. FAULKNER. Are they not under the control of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds and officers of the War Department?

Mr. ALLISON. They are absolutely under the control of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds; and all the money herein appropriated is expended by him.

I do not know whether the adjustment which has been made is wholly fair as between the people who happen to reside here and who are taxpayers and the Government of the United States, which is a large owner of property in this city, having these wide avenues and streets for the convenience of the Government. I do not know whether it is a wise distribution of the burdens of this District and this city as provided for in the act of 1878. We are, I know, constantly departing from that rule, as for example, in this bill and other bills, for improvements outside of the original limits of the city of Washington, the owners of property are required to pay the whole amount.

About this Capitol we certainly would not think—at least it would not so seem to me—that it would be a wise distribution of burdens to compel the revenues of the District of Columbia to be applied to our expenditures here, nor do I think it a wise thing for us to apply these revenues to the expenditures about the State, War, and Navy Department building, or about the Executive Mansion, or about the grounds below the Executive Mansion, or about the Smithsonian grounds, which are very large grounds, which are wholly under the control of the Government of the United States and are improved from time to time and kept in condition and repair—sometimes very poor condition and very poor repair—by our appropriations.

What I object to is that in the last days of the session, after the ordinary legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has passed both Houses and become a law, embracing these appropriations or a portion of them, that we shall have interpolated into this bill a provision that the expenditures provided by a law passed only three days ago shall not be expended as therein provided, but shall be taken in part from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

It is upon this ground that the Committee on Appropriations believed that it was not wise now, whether this adjustment be reasonable and proper as between those who are taxpayers in the District of Columbia and the Government of the United States to change this distribution at this time upon an appropriation bill, and especially where every item of expenditure in this bill has been paid from the Treasury of the United States, without, so far as I know, even a suggestion in either House of Congress up to the time this bill appeared in this Chamber and in the other House that these expenditures should be paid one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Of course, I have no special desire or interest about this matter. My only desire is to do as near as I can what is fair and equitable between these two parties having a sort of limited partnership respecting these burdens, but it does seem to me that if we are to materially change the situation respecting these expenditures it should not be done upon an appropriation bill during the last hours of a Congress.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to put plainly before the Senate the real question. This House clause is not a proposition to put upon the District of Columbia a greater proportion of expense than was planned in the act of 1878. It is a proposition to put upon the District of Columbia the same percentage of expense distinctly fixed by that act.

Now, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] makes a distinction which, when you analyze it, is no distinction at all. He refers to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, in which watchmen are provided for the different parks and circles and places in this city, and he says they are under the control of the superintendent of public buildings and grounds.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, he mistakes my position. My position is that the entire subject of the parks is absolutely and exclusively under the jurisdiction of the United States through the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and that every dollar expended by the Government through these appropriation bills for the improvement of these parks is expended by that officer, and never is in any way controlled by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. That is true not only of the officers, but of the entire expenditure for improvements.

Mr. CHILTON. That, at last, as I have said, is a distinction without a difference. Who appoints the Commissioners of the District of Columbia? The same officer who appoints the superintendent of public buildings and grounds. The Commissioners are but the instrument of Congress, just as the superintendent of public buildings and grounds is the instrument of Congress, each managing different parts of the machinery of administration in this District.

It makes no grain of difference in substance whether these parks are put under the administration of the superintendent appointed by the President or the three Commissioners appointed by the President. In either case it is the exercise of a jurisdiction over the District affairs conferred by the Constitution.

The true question is, What will be an equitable allotment of the expense of caring for the parks and reservations in this city? Can any man conclude that it is the duty of the taxpayers of the United States to pay the whole cost of watchmen in Dupont Circle or Thomas Circle or McPherson Square or the other parks in this city?

The Senator from Iowa states a moot question when he discusses what should be done about the grounds of the Executive Mansion. I call attention again to the fact that all the expenditures connected with the Executive grounds proper are to be paid from the Treasury of the United States, and no part of those expenses are laid upon the District of Columbia by this bill.

Not only so, sir, when the Senator speaks of the Capitol he raises another moot question. All the expenses connected with this Capitol are paid for out of the Federal Treasury.

In connection with another item, the Garfield Hospital, I wish to call attention to the language of the act of 1878. It says:

The cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons belonging to or controlled wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia.

This shows a clear intention to treat charitable institutions in this city as coming within the rule of division, yet it is now proposed that the whole expense of maintaining the Garfield Hospital shall be borne by the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. The appropriation for the Garfield Hospital has been paid out of the Treasury of the United States from the time of its foundation, for the very good reason, as it seems to me, that the contributions for that hospital were gathered from all the nations of the world. It was established here by the Government of the United States, and it receives within its walls people from every State in this Union. Therefore no portion of the expenses of that hospital has ever been charged to the people of the District of Columbia until we attached to it a local hospital here for minor contagious diseases, which, of course, should be drawn within the purview of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. So the clause inserted by the House is a new provision, and it is in violation of the uniform construction which has been given in the two Houses to that law of 1878 from that time up to now.

Mr. CHILTON. Well, Mr. President, I am at a loss to see how it can be claimed that a hospital maintained out of the Treasury of the United States in part is not one of the subjects in the thought of those who framed the law of 1878. I will read that language again:

The cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons belonging to or controlled wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, and which are now by law supported wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia.

The Garfield Hospital in this city is like many other hospitals. If a man goes to New York and he should fall upon the streets helpless or disabled, he would be taken to one of the hospitals of that city, no matter from what part of the country he might have come. Although he might live in Colorado or in Texas or in California, would he not be carried to a city hospital for treatment?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest, if the Senator will allow me, that he does not seem to be well informed as to the condition of Garfield Hospital. That hospital was founded by private contribution, and it is sustained by private contributions, save and except the appropriation made every year by the General Government for the indigent people who are not supposed to belong here, and it is for that purpose we pay our proportion of the contribution. Then we have a minor contagious hospital on the grounds, which, of course, we ought to take care of.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado seems to think that I am not well informed in regard to the Garfield Hospital. Perhaps I am not well informed in regard to the details of the organization of Garfield Hospital, but I am well informed enough to know that it makes no whit of difference, so far as the present inquiry is concerned, how it is organized or maintained. If its support is become a charge upon the Federal Treasury, either in whole or in part, the District revenues should share the charge.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that it has a private directory and is supported practically by private contributions and by the fees which are received. It is not a public hospital in the sense in which the Senator speaks of the hospitals in many of our cities.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it is a public hospital in such sense that the Treasury of the United States is called upon to contribute to it, and the fair design of this law of 1878 was that wherever the Government of the United States was called upon to contribute to any of these institutions of charity, the District of Columbia should bear half that contribution. That is the proposition I have been trying to enforce here.

I go back to the other question—the question of the parks and circles and reservations of this city. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken again as to them. He maintains that nearly all these watchmen, as I understand him, are connected with the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say "nearly all of them." I said "many of them."

Mr. CHILTON. The bill does not bear out that statement. It says in regard to these watchmen:

One in Franklin Park; one in Lafayette Park; two in Smithsonian grounds; one in Judiciary Park; one in Lincoln Park and adjacent reservations; one at Iowa Circle; one at Thomas Circle and neighboring reservations; one at Washington Circle and neighboring reservations; one at Dupont Circle and neighboring reservations; one at McPherson and Farragut parks; one at Stanton Park and neighboring reservations; two at Henry and Seaton parks and reservations east of Botanic Garden; one at Mount Vernon Park and adjacent reservations.

It appears that but two out of the whole number are devoted to the care of the Smithsonian Institution grounds.

I am not hopeful of making any particular impression upon the Senate in regard to these matters. I know how anxious, of course, all are to support the Committee on Appropriations; it is a very desirable thing to do ordinarily, but the provision amended out of the bill was carefully put in by the House of Representatives. It is not an innovation which I or any other member of the Senate seeks to introduce.

I can not see that it is a judicious thing for us to strike out that provision in this bill and saddle the whole of these expenses upon the Federal Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have a division on the amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 16; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Frye,	Mantle,	Ross,
Bacon,	Gear,	Martin,	Shoup,
Bate,	Gorman,	Mason,	Simon,
Berry,	Gray,	Money,	Smith,
Chilton,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Spooner,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will be adopted. I think a moment's reflection on the part of the Senator from Texas and others who are opposing this amendment will convince them that the amendment should be adopted.

The original adjustment of the matter of taxation in the District of Columbia was had after the most careful and patient examination by a committee of Congress, and was fixed as it was supposed, permanently, upon a fair basis; that is to say, that the Government of the United States, owning in fee all of the highways in the city of Washington, and all of these great reservations, and having more than one-half in value of all the property within the city, should pay one-half of the expenditures. In the matter of their own reservations, of their own public buildings and grounds, they were to pay the entire amount precisely as the care of the property of the citizens is to be paid by them.

There is one other consideration that can not be overlooked. There is no comparison to be made in the conduct and management of this city with any other in the Union. There is no city that would go to the expense we are compelled to go to in the preservation of public grounds and public buildings in Washington, and it would be manifestly unfair and unjust to the citizens, after having paid one-half of the expense of keeping up all the streets and all the public improvements, to charge them a single penny for the very expensive establishment that we are bound to maintain for the public, for the United States, in the matter of lighting and preserving and taking care of and guarding the public buildings.

It is true that within the last year or two attempts have been made and are now going on to destroy that system, which was agreed to, not by the citizens of Washington, because that measure was meted out by Congress itself—that is, to make the citizens of the city of Washington bear the entire expense of opening the streets, which the Government owns and controls and manages.

When it comes to the matter of the citizens of Washington paying one-half of the cost of lighting the Capitol grounds or the grounds south of the President's House, or around these buildings, or in the grounds about the Monument, I am certain that the Senator from Texas, when he comes to reflect, will see how unjust that would be.

The rate of taxation is comparatively high, owing to the immense expenditures that we require to be made, not only for the citizens of Washington, but to beautify and make this the greatest city of the Union. It is an improvement in which every citizen has a pride, and we make these extravagant expenditures because it is the capital of the country, laid out upon a greater scale than any other city in the United States. It is designed to be handsome and great, and the people of this country, in my judgment, will not begrudge the small pittance that is required to put it and keep it in condition, so that it will attract the attention of every visitor, no matter from what part of the world he comes.

I therefore trust that we will observe the rules, Mr. President, observe the contract that was solemnly entered into by the act which has been referred to, and permit this matter to stand. If it has grown—I do not think it has—to be an unfair contract on the part of the Government, then take up the question and meet it and adjust it after a fair hearing and a patient examination. If there be a majority in Congress at any time that believes that this is too great a city, too well provided with light and policemen in the public parks, let the contract be undone in a proper way and at a proper time, and not attempt to force it through by legislation on an appropriation bill.

I trust the amendment, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out this provision and permit the law to stand as it has been since 1878 will be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland is certainly far from the point in claiming that there is any attempt here to get away from the rule of division which was adopted by the law of 1878. That law, sir, was outlined upon the theory that the District of Columbia should pay one-half of the District expenses and that the Federal Treasury should pay the other half. It is useless to cloud this question.

If the members of the Senate believe it is fair and right to demand of the people of the United States that they keep watchmen in Dupont Circle and Thomas Circle and Farragut Square and McPherson Square, and that they should bear the whole of the expense connected with these splendid reservations, then they ought to vote to strike out the provision of the House. But if they believe, as I believe, that the United States Treasury will do its full part toward the people of the District of Columbia by paying one-half of those expenses, then they ought to vote against the amendment of the Senate committee and agree to the House provision which charges the District of Columbia with only 50 per cent of those expenses.

Mr. President, this is a great city. I am as proud of it as the Senator from Maryland. But it does no good to complicate this question by any generalities like that. The question is, is it not fair that the local property in this city should bear one-half of the expense connected with the maintenance of these splendid streets and splendid parks, which are a local as well as a general delight?

Mr. FAULKNER obtained the floor.

Mr. QUAY. With the permission of the Senator from West Virginia, I ask that the bills which have just been received from the House of Representatives for the construction of public buildings be laid before the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania in a moment. I wish to make a few observations in reply to the Senator from Texas.

The Senator from Texas seems to imply in his remarks that the Senator from Maryland is trying to becloud this question and avoid the effect of the contract entered into between the Government of the United States and the citizens of the District of Columbia in the act of 1878. We have not, by proposing this amendment from the Committee on Appropriations, attempted in any way to avoid that statute.

That statute proposed that one-half of the taxes raised for District purposes should be paid by the Government of the United States and one-half by the property and people of the District. This settlement has been carried out in perfect good faith by the Government of the United States and the citizens of the District of Columbia. It has never before been suggested by any Congress, in construing the act of 1878, that this imposed upon the people of the District of Columbia the expense in maintaining that property which the Government of the United States owns in fee simple, and controls and manages through its executive officers, entirely distinct from the District government.

I understand that the legislative government that existed in this District during the period known as Governor Shepherd's administration was not given any jurisdiction of these parks. They were segregated from the administrative control of the District government; and if we are to change this rule and make one-half of all the appropriations for the preservation and improvement of these parks payable out of the local revenues—in other words, to be paid by the owners of property in the District of Columbia—the next move that would be made by the Senator from Texas would be to require that all the improvements of the Capitol grounds, the lighting of these grounds, and the Capitol police should be borne by the people of the District of Columbia, or at least one-half of those expenses. I assert, after an examination of this question, that such a proposition would not be fair and just between the Government and the property owners of the District.

Where is there a city in this world that embraces within its streets the amount of area that the streets of Washington contain? Not one. Fifty-one per cent of the entire real estate within the boundaries of this city is included in the streets of the city. Congress recognized that fact. It realized that all these magnificent reservations were withdrawn from taxation; that all the magnificent buildings that beautify and adorn it were withdrawn from taxation.

It was fully understood that the Government of the United States owned a large amount of property subject to sale and disposition, but which was not subject to taxation; that hundreds of lots within the boundaries of the city of Washington were all withdrawn from taxation. Appreciating the force of these facts, and knowing that the people owning property here could not bear such a burden of taxation as would be imposed in making the improvements as contemplated for this great and magnificent capital of our nation, Congress entered into the agreement of 1878. This agreement has been fairly and honestly carried out by the Congress to the time when this bill, at the end of a short session, has attempted through, the act of the House, to change the entire arrangement which has existed, I am informed, from the foundation of the Government to the present time.

I believe that never in the history of the government of the District of Columbia have we ever required the citizens to pay one-half of the expense, or any portion of the expense, of the management, control, or improvement of these public reservations. It is an entirely new proposition, laid before Congress for the first time certainly since the act of 1878, and that without giving any opportunity for consideration, either by the committee or by those directly interested. For these reasons I sincerely hope the amendment of the committee will be sustained.

Mr. CHILTON obtained the floor.

Mr. QUAY. I renew my request for unanimous consent to take up the public-building bills which have come from the House of Representatives. It is very important that the amendments and the bills should be acted upon, and I trust that the Senator from Texas will give way.

Mr. CHILTON. I should take but a moment, but I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer an amendment incorporating a bill passed by this body with reference to a public building in Los Angeles, which has not been conceded a hearing elsewhere.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to procure a site for and cause to be erected thereon a suitable addition to the public building now the property of the United States in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., with fireproof vaults therein, for the adequate accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, internal revenue, customs offices, and other Government offices in the city of Los Angeles, Cal.

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and all improvements and additions, complete, the sum of $250,000; Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of California shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein; and there is hereby appropriated for the purchase of said site and the commencement of said additional building $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. The passage of the bill involves the necessity of appointing conferees. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. QUAY, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. MONEY were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2056) for the erection of a public building at Menominee, Mich.; and

A bill (H. R. 10804) for the erection of a public building at Anniston, Ala.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12009) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, returning to the proposition which was pending at the time the appropriation bill was interrupted, I simply desire to restate it, and I will not protract the discussion. The House Committee on Appropriations put in a clause which requires the District of Columbia to pay one-half the expenses of watchmen, lights, etc., in the public parks in this city. The Senate Committee on Appropriations strikes out that clause and leaves the entire expense of watchmen, lights, etc., for these parks to be borne by the Federal Government.

Now, Mr. President, I have but one word to say about the argument of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. It would be to some extent applicable if it was proposed now to make the District of Columbia bear the whole of this expense, but it is totally inapplicable when the proposition is simply to make the District of Columbia bear one-half of it.

These parks are used by the people of the District of Columbia just as the public parks in every other city in the country are used by those who live near them. I can not see the slightest reason why these parks so dedicated and appropriated to the common public use of the people of this city should be maintained wholly by the taxpayers of the United States, and so believing, it seems to me that we ought not to adopt the amendment of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Texas, who seems to be familiar with this matter, wherein the House provision in the bill conflicts with the general law on that subject.

Mr. CHILTON. It does not conflict with it. It rather tallies with it, as I have argued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GRAY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not see him here. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], but under our arrangement in matters not political either is at liberty to vote in the absence of the other. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I notice that he has not voted, and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee, which was passed over, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, line 9, after the word "hour," strike out the following:

Provided further, That $3,400 of the foregoing sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the remainder from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, line 4, after the word "cents," strike out:

One half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, line 23, after the word "dollars," strike out the following:

One half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, line 3, after the word "dollars," strike out:

One half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Returning to page 57 and recurring to the last amendment inserted after line 10, where there is an appropriation provided for, I move to insert at the end of the amendment the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 40, line 17. I ask the chairman to agree to striking out the proviso that the appropriation shall not be available until the station shall be completed.

Mr. ALLISON. The first two lines in the amendment on page 40, including the word "Provided," and down to and including the word "completed," should be stricken out. I ask unanimous consent that those words may be stricken from the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after the word "dollars," in line 17, it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available until said station shall be completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will require a further amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Strike out "and" and insert "That."

Mr. GALLINGER. So as to read: "Provided, That."

Mr. ALLISON. Having a colon there, that is probably true, but otherwise it would not be necessary. I am perfectly willing to say "Provided, That."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Strike out the word "and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "and" is stricken out by agreement.

Mr. ALLISON. It will then read: "Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation," etc.

Mr. PETTUS. I now offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama offers the amendment which has heretofore been read, providing for a public building at Selma, Ala. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the situation as respects public buildings is one that I think should be seriously considered by the Senate. It is well known that uniformly under the ruling of the Chair it is the practice of the Senate that no appropriation for any public building shall be made unless authority of law has been previously given authorizing the appropriation. That has been the rule, at least so far as I know, rarely interfered with for the last twenty years.

Now, in the last days of the session, we are confronted with a large number of bills that have passed the Senate and have recently passed the House, and also with bills that have passed the House and were only considered in the Senate to-day. The appropriations for public buildings have usually been placed upon the sundry civil bill; indeed, I believe invariably. The bills that have passed both Houses are not yet laws, but they have passed through every process except that of enrollment and the signature of the President, and undoubtedly they will all pass that process before the sundry civil bill can become a law.

It is a question whether we shall deal with the public-building bills that have come to us so recently, and that have not yet, in fact, received the signature of the President. I have no doubt that because of their number it will be the sense of the Senate that these bills in some way shall be incorporated in the sundry civil appropriation bill. Believing that, the Committee on Appropriations have undertaken to deal with this question, and I suggest now, in a general way, that it would be wise for us to put upon this bill all the public-building bills which have passed the Senate and the House and that now only require the signatures of the presiding officers and the President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I interrupt the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Do I understand the chairman of the Appropriations Committee to say that he thinks it is necessary to appropriate the full amount to construct all these buildings, amounting to some eight or ten million dollars in round numbers—I do not know how much—at this session of Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator understood me to say that, he misunderstood me.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood the Senator to say that the committee had come to the conclusion that they could put these bills upon the sundry civil bill. I do not know exactly what he meant by that.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say that if we appropriate for these buildings my own judgment is—and I have conferred as well as I could with other members of the committee—that we should appropriate only one-half of the amount of the limit indicated in the various bills.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to inquire what is the necessity for any larger appropriations than is necessary to procure the site in each of these cases? Is it not true that we shall have another Congress before the plans can be so matured as to begin the construction of the buildings?

Mr. ALLISON. I think very likely, and I was about to add, if the Senator had not interrupted me, that one-half of these appropriations would be sufficient to procure the sites and make the plans and, perhaps, commence the construction of the buildings. I have not a list of the buildings before me, but I understand that several bills have passed both Houses to-day providing for buildings that involve very large sums, as, for example, the custom-house in the city of New York, which, I believe, involves an expenditure of $1,750,000.

That building is to be constructed upon a site presented to the Government of the United States, I understand, by the city of New York. I do not believe there is any place in the United States where a public building is more needed for the collection of the customs than in the city of New York. Therefore, in the case of a building of that character and of such pressing necessity, it seems to me, having the site, we should make an appropriation which will enable the Government to progress with reasonable rapidity in the construction of the building.

There are other buildings where large appropriations are made or suggested where a smaller sum would be ample, in my judgment. I am told there are one or two other buildings here where the limit of cost is from $15,000 to $2,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. Where?

Mr. ALLISON. The building at Cleveland, Ohio, has, I think, a limit of $2,000,000. I am not certain; it may be $1,800,000.

Mr. QUAY. It is twenty-two hundred thousand dollars. I think the New York appropriation, the Cleveland appropriation, and the Indianapolis appropriation are the only heavy ones.

Mr. ALLISON. The Indianapolis appropriation is $1,500,000. I thought the limit of the Cleveland appropriation was $2,000,000. As respects Indianapolis, where there is no site, and as respects Cleveland, where there is no site, it seems to me that a very small appropriation would be required. A large number of the buildings have a limit of cost of $100,000 or less.

It seems to me that we ought to consider this entire subject. Some of the States, I note, have a goodly number of buildings, and if I were to express my own view I would say that some of them, in my judgment, could very well be postponed for the present. But they are all now upon an equality as to their situation. The Senator from Alabama now offers an amendment to the bill which provides for a public building at Selma, Ala., at a cost of $100,000.

Mr. PETTUS. Or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Treasury may think necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. That bill has not had consideration in the other House. Therefore, in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the House as respects public buildings the amendment is not in order upon this bill. I am speaking only for myself. If the Senator from Alabama can arrange the building at Selma somewhere in accord with the buildings in cities of like size for which bills have been passed, I feel under the circumstances for one that both Houses have practically settled the policy at least that where one House has passed a bill of that character the other House would naturally concur in it under similar circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator, in speaking about the custom-house in New York, spoke of the estimate as being two millions. The bill appropriates $750,000. It reads:

To acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for customs purposes, the premises heretofore selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, under the act of September 14, 1888, as a site for a custom-house building.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I was wholly mistaken.

Mr. COCKRELL. It further provides in section 2:

That upon the acquisition of said site the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be erected thereon a substantial, commodious, and fireproof building for the purposes of a custom-house, at a cost not to exceed $3,000,000, exclusive of the cost of the site, and for the preparation of the plans and the commencement of the work the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I was only speaking from what might be called rumor. Of course, I have not had time to examine the details of all these questions. It is a very large appropriation, but perhaps none too large if that building is to be constructed at an early period of time.

I know, Mr. President, at least of one or two other amendments, which will be explained, I have no doubt, by the Senators who will offer them, that are very much in the condition of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, where buildings are greatly needed in the localities where they are desired. So in the early part of the evening I asked the Senator from Alabama to withhold his amendment for the moment, and I should be glad now if he would still withhold it until we have settled in the Senate by a comparison of views as to what shall be the number of public-building bills that are now laws or will be laws at an early day and the buildings provided for by statute.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the city of Selma, in which my colleague and I have a most delightful home, is a very attractive place and has an excellent population. The Senate has on three or four occasions in past years voted to erect a public building at Selma. The post-office receipts in the office there are about $25,000 a year. It is not a very large community. Selma contains perhaps about 15,000 inhabitants, but they are all resident people, having their homes there. They are not laborers who come in from the iron works or coal fields or anything of that kind. It is a city of residences, and I think there is perhaps no city in the South that is superior to it either in its attractions or its population.

We have been modest in asking the Government of the United States to assist us, and our people have a purpose, which they very freely express, of restraining the expenditures of the Gov-ment instead of undertaking to increase taxation for the purposes of extravagant appropriations and the like of that. But they hold my colleague and myself down to an accountability for things of that kind.

If we were able to get a bill through here to expend $500,000 or $1,000,000 for a public building in Selma, the people there would rebuke us for putting any such bill as that through the Congress of the United States. So we try to limit our requests upon the Government to what we consider to be appropriate to such a place and under such conditions.

The post-office there is one of the public buildings that is needed. Of course we are paying a large rental for a building, a good-looking house which was built for a store or a bank or something of that kind, and it is surrounded close up with very inflammable buildings. It is the public moneys, the letters, and everything of that kind which are always in danger by fire, and it is necessary to carry a strong insurance upon the office in order to recoup the Government in the event of a loss.

We have opportunities there of getting very good locations which are entirely free from the danger of fire.

The Government of the United States can get a good location on which to properly locate a building there. We have all thought that a building to cost not exceeding $100,000 would be an appropriate kind of a building for that city. It would have some very pleasant neighbors in the way of handsome buildings in that town.

I am perfectly in accord with the Senator from Iowa on one proposition, and that is, with this great mass or raft of bills which are coming over here from the House of Representatives to-night, evidently hurried through for the occasion for the express purpose of getting on this bill, in a strange freak of liberality on the part of somebody who is in authority there; and I think that we ought in the Senate to say—and I suggest it to the Senator from Iowa—that not exceeding one-half of the sums of money that are named for public buildings in these enactments shall be expended within the next fiscal year.

That would relieve the situation very much, and yet it would leave the appropriations stand and allow the buildings to go on and be completed. Probably none of them will be completed within the year anyhow. It will be at least some time before this bill will go into operation. I should be willing to agree to such an arrangement.

Upon the question of order which the Senator makes here, I think I have looked into that sufficiently to satisfy myself that there is no substantial merit in it, and that is perfectly illustrated here to-night. Appropriations must be made in pursuance of law or in pursuance of an act or resolution of the Senate passed at this session of Congress—not of the House at all; but we are talking about our rules.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will remember that I said that under our rules none of these bills are strictly in order, not even those which come from the House of Representatives, because they are not laws.

Mr. MORGAN. Those that came from the House are not in order until the Senate has passed upon them; but the Senate has passed them to-night, and therefore they are now in order; but they are in order under our rules, not because they are laws, for they are not laws and they will not be laws until the President of the United States has approved them. They are mere ventures; they are mere propositions for laws, and they have no value here under our rules because they have passed through the House of Representatives.

Our rules do not relate to proceedings in the House at all. They relate to proceedings in the Senate, and only in the Senate. We credit this body with a sufficient amount of intelligence and honesty and faithfulness in the transaction of public business to say that when at the present session of Congress we have enacted a bill or a resolution we shall make an appropriation to carry that bill or that resolution into effect in order upon a general appropriation bill. That is our rule.

The amendment which my colleague presented here to-night has passed the Senate in the form of a bill which contains an appropriation of $100,000, or so much thereof as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require, to be expended for this building. So that the amendment of which my colleague is the author and which has passed through the Senate is strictly in order under our rules, and the bills coming from the House of Representatives would none of them have been in order if they had not passed the Senate; but now, having passed the Senate, they are all in order.

We, however, stand not only upon a ground quite equal to that of the gentlemen who have had bills passed through the other House, but we stand a little higher, if anything, I may say, because we predicate our action here and our rights to have this amendment adopted upon the action of the Senate of the United States.

Why did we put the provision in our rules that the recommendation by one of the standing or select committees of this body should make a proposition in order if it was otherwise free from objection? Because we respect our committees. So, of course, we respect the action of the Senate when it has by a vote adopted a bill which contains that appropriation.

I have not thought at any time that there could be any sort of question about a measure being in operation as a law under Rule XVI if it had passed the Senate at the present session. It is the same thing precisely as if it had been a law fully passed by both Houses and approved by the President. So I think the question of order does not lie against this amendment at all.

As to the other matter, I notice that a bill has just come over from the House of Representatives in favor of a public building at Anniston. Our Republican friend, Mr. ALDRICH, over there has had influence in the House of Representatives to get a bill through appropriating $50,000, perhaps, for that purpose. I am not averse at all—I do not know how my colleague may feel about it—about starting out on this proposition at Selma with a $50,000 appropriation, yet I know it is too small.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator perhaps did not understand fully what I stated. If there is an appropriation of one-half of the sums now proposed for these small buildings and authority to contract for the construction of the buildings, surely that will be enough where the appropriation is $100,000.

Mr. MORGAN. If we can make that a general thing all over the Senate, I am agreed to it.

Mr. ALLISON. That was precisely the suggestion I made. I also made another suggestion, which perhaps the Senator did not note; and that was that the bills which are now before us in the Senate, and which we have had under consideration to-day, for erecting public buildings in cities and towns having twelve or fifteen thousand inhabitants, or having postal receipts of $25,000 per annum, have not, as a rule, carried an appropriation of $100,000 for a public building.

Mr. MORGAN. They do not any of them have $25,000 in postal receipts except Selma.

Mr. ALLISON. A great many of them have more than that.

Mr. MORGAN. But they are large cities, like Mobile, Montgomery, and Birmingham.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; cities of that class. What I want to suggest to the Senator from Alabama is that cities of the class of Selma running through this bill do not have appropriations as large as $100,000. Therefore I meant to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that to compare his bill with the bills that come to us from the House of Representatives there ought to be a reduction of the maximum limit of cost. I have been told that for the very building at Selma, Ala., the appropriation in the bill as passed through the House committee, not, I think, the Committee of the Whole, was $50,000.

Mr. MORGAN. At this session?

Mr. ALLISON. At this session. And Anniston, Ala., which is a city of about the size or perhaps not quite so large as Selma, but a manufacturing city, has now upon this list of appropriations a provision for the appropriation of $50,000 for a public building.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, for my State of New Hampshire we have passed three times through the Senate a bill appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Nashua, a city of over 24,000 people. The House committee has made a favorable report on the bill, but reduced the amount to $60,000, which I shall be very glad to accept; and I propose to offer that as an amendment to the pending bill when I get the opportunity.

Mr. MORGAN. I am in the same situation as the Senator from New Hampshire, and I am willing to accept anything that comes along for Selma.

Mr. ALLISON. What I think we ought to do is to have a small maximum limit for the building at Selma.

Mr. MORGAN. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the bill for a public building at Selma had passed the House of Representatives? I think he is mistaken if he says that.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say that. I said the bill had passed through the standing committee of the House, and I thought it might have passed through the Committee of the Whole, for an appropriation of $50,000; but I am not certain as to that.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] tells me that there is a bill upon our table appropriating $50,000 for one of the most flourishing towns I know of in the State of Wisconsin, with a population of from 15,000 to 18,000.

What I wish to say is that if we are to place upon this bill all these provisions for public buildings which have come to us so recently, and with reasonable rapidity [laughter], I think if the Senators from Alabama desire a public building at Selma they should as nearly as may be at least fix a maximum limit in accord with the limit for the other public buildings which are to be provided for, if any are to be provided for, in this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I accept the situation and the honor, too, of leading off here in the Senate in the direction of economy for the next fiscal year. I will say to the Senator from Iowa, we will accept this appropriation amended so as to reduce it to $50,000, but we do not do it, we wish you to understand, because we think it just, but in deference to the situation which exists in the Senate to-night. So I move now, Mr. President, to amend the amendment by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$50,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Nashua, N. H.

Before the amendment is read I want to make a statement concerning this matter. Three times the Senate has passed a bill appropriating $100,000 for a public building for the city of Nashua, N. H. The House committee has recently made a favorable report on the bill, but they have reduced the amount of the appropriation to $80,000. From the House report I read very briefly, as follows:

Nashua is the gate city of New Hampshire. It has a population of 24,000 and ranks as the second city in the State in population and manufactures. As a railroad center it holds first rank. Six important railroads radiate from the city, forming direct connection with Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont, New York, Canada, and the West.

The industries of Nashua are the most varied in the State. They include cotton, iron and steel, soapstone, boots and shoes, machinery, engines, boilers, lathes, presses, glazed paper, cardboard, edge tools, ice-cream freezers, bobbins and shuttles, and lumber in all its varieties. These industries employ more than 4,000 persons, and their aggregate capital is upward of $3,000,000. The annual value of the products turned out is more than $2,000,000, and the wages annually paid exceed $1,000,000.

Nashua is the location of courts, registry of deeds, registry of probate, has 20 public schools, a public library of over 8,000 volumes, a dozen churches, and 2 daily and 2 weekly newspapers.

The post-office quarters in Nashua are contracted in space and located at the narrowest point on the principal street, rendering it undesirable and dangerous. A public building will remove these disadvantages and give to this enterprising and rapidly growing city a suitable and adequate place for transacting the public business.

Nashua is a rapidly growing manufacturing city whose population in 1880 was 13,453; in 1890, 19,206, and now at least 24,000. The post-office receipts are about $26,000 per annum and steadily increasing, and the annual net receipts are some $13,000. The Federal business justifies, and its convenience demands, the erection of a public building at Nashua. Such a building, including suitable site, sufficient for the accommodation of the postal business for many years to come and furnishing quarters for internal-revenue and other Government purposes, so far as they are likely to require room at Nashua, your committee believes can be erected for $60,000.

I think the amount named is not quite large enough; but in view of the fact that we are proposing to appropriate for so many public buildings in the country, and it is necessary for us all to practice some degree of economy, I shall be very glad to accept $60,000, or such proportion of it during the next fiscal year as the Committee on Appropriations may think should be appropriated; and I shall find no fault, Mr. President, if a provision for erecting a public building at Nashua at a cost of $60,000 is incorporated in this bill.

I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 2, it is proposed to add:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices, in the city of Nashua and State of New Hampshire, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $60,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination, and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury should deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall, within thirty days after such examination, make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusions in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as heretofore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses; Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish to throw myself upon the indulgence of the Senate for a short time, and I should like to be heard. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, to come in on page 3, after line 14.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

For constructing an addition to the public building at Hartford, Conn., $175,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the post-office building at Hartford was started about 1875. It went on very slowly under the old-fashioned system. It was occupied in 1882, and in a year or two was found to be not sufficient to accommodate the large business there transacted. Owing to the great business of the town, the revenues of the post-office doubled in sixteen years. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the receipts were in the neighborhood of $241,000. That was for the fiscal year before the last. For the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1898, the receipts were $260,000. The ratio of expenses to the receipts in those two years was 28 per cent—a lower rate of proportionate expense than any free-delivery office in the United States could show.

The Hartford post-office netted to the Government for the year 1897 about $181,000, and for the year 1898 about $188,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Over expenses?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly; over the expenses. The postmaster describes them as net receipts, and the First Assistant Postmaster-General in the same way.

The land belongs to the Government. It is the best lot in the city of Hartford. It is right directly adjoining our old state-house, which is now our city hall. There is enough of the lot to enable this addition to be made. I have here a drawing of the present limits and a drawing of the limits which are desired and for which the appropriation is asked, and the land, as I say, will cost nothing. All the appropriation will be expended upon ground belonging to the Government.

We have had to go to the outer limits of the city to establish a carrier office and hire a building out there in order to take some of the load off of the central office. We have had to cut off a considerable section of the lobby, which belongs to the public, in order to make sufficient room. We have had to throw out certain conveniences for hanging and holding mail bags and to put in cheaper and more condensed and compact arrangements for the purpose.

Mr. Heath, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, I think has visited the place some time within a year or two, though I am not quite sure as to that. He says:

Referring to the inclosed amendment to H. R. bill 12008, appropriating $175,000 for constructing an addition to the public building at Hartford, Conn., and your personal request for information as to the necessity for additional room in the post-office at Hartford, I beg to state that the present post-office building at Hartford was first occupied by the post-office in 1882. The building was in process of construction about seven years. The gross receipts of the Hartford post-office in 1882 amounted to $128,800, and for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898, the gross receipts of that office amounted to $260,722.

That is more than doubling the receipts.

As far back as 1891 complaints reached the Department relative to the cramped condition of the post-office at Hartford, and it has been found necessary to make a number of changes in the arrangement of the fixtures so as to provide more room. A part of the lobby has been taken into the working room of the office, and about eighteen months ago the Department found it necessary to establish a full carrier station so as to give more room for the clerks and carriers.

As the Government owns the land on which it is proposed to erect the addition, I trust the Congress will see fit to make the appropriation. There is no question but that the additional space is absolutely essential for the proper conduct of the postal business at Hartford.

Very respectfully,

PERRY S. HEATH.

First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
United States Senate.

There is no question but that the additional space is absolutely essential for the proper conduct of the postal business in Hartford. I do not know that I can say any more. I know from personal examination of the building the difficulties under which the postmaster labors, and he says he will be obliged, at somebody's expense, pretty soon to go out and hire rooms in the vicinity unless he can get some addition to the building. In his letter to me the postmaster at Hartford says:

This building was completed and ready for occupancy some eighteen years ago. At the time of its completion, and by reason of the growth of the city and its business, it was then inadequate for the needs which it was designed for. You can therefore well imagine what the condition of the office is at the present time, when each and every year since that period has shown an increase in the receipts of the office.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, the receipts were in the neighborhood of $241,000, and for the year ending June 30, 1898, in the neighborhood of $260,000. The ratio of expense to receipts for these two years was 28 per cent, which was the lowest rate of expense of any free-delivery office in the United States.

Thus it will be seen that the Hartford office netted to the Government for the year 1897 about $181,000, and for the year 1898 about $188,000. You will observe that there was an increase of about $20,000 during the year 1898 over the corresponding period of 1897, this being the gross receipts. With such a growth almost annually for the last five or six years you would naturally wonder how it was that we were able to get along up to the present time if the office was inadequate for its needs at the time of completion.

The answer is that it became necessary to establish in the manufacturing center of the city a full station, where we could place a few of our carriers and take care of the outgoing mail received from the manufacturers in that location. That having been done, we still find the business at the main office increasing enormously by reason of the large insurance, banking, and other interests. We have devised all manner of means for making every available square foot of floor surface count for something.

We have even gone so far as to deprive the public of lobby space, which they could ill afford to lose, but which became necessary in order to perform the work devolving upon us. We have likewise had to discard what is known as the Harrison rack used in every post-office in the country for hanging pouches and sacks, and replace it with something of our own design, because it took up a little less room. This is likewise true of our mailing case used for distributing all outgoing letter mail.

In this way we have managed to gain breathing space for our carrier force, and that is about all. Our money-order business issued and paid amounts to nearly $2,000,000 annually, and is increasing rapidly. The registry business during the last year or two has made most rapid strides by reason of the new system recently adopted by some of the assessment insurance companies whereby quarterly they send out hundreds of registered letters. This office has recently been highly commended by the honorable First Assistant Postmaster-General by reason of our excellent showing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut has been stated.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is approved by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ALLISON. I regard the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut as rather special in its character from the statement made by him, and am only sorry that it is not in the category of these other public-building bills. But I shall make no point against his amendment, except that I hope he will modify it so as to make one-half of this appropriation available for the next fiscal year and authorize, as we expect to do in the other cases, a contract for the completion of the building.

Mr. HAWLEY. I accept the suggestion with pleasure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let it lie upon the table for a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie upon the table.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is laid aside, the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations will prepare an amendment covering the phraseology.

Mr. CLARK. I offer an amendment, and I desire to say that the public building therein contemplated is in a town where there are held United States district and circuit courts, wherein is located the United States land office, besides the post-office and other ordinary offices in such a place. A bill for this purpose has already passed the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it passed the House of Representatives?

Mr. CLARK. It has not. It stands in exactly the same category as the last three or four bills which have been incorporated as amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. What three or four? There is only one.

Mr. CLARK. The Alabama case.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the bottom of page 3 the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, land offices, and for other Government purposes, at Evanston, in the State of Wyoming, the cost of said site and building complete not to exceed the sum of $100,000, not more than $15,000 of which shall be used for the purchase of the site:

Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; And provided further, That no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Wyoming shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of the State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that he modify the maximum amount.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will reflect on the statement I made when I presented the amendment—

Mr. SPOONER. What is the maximum amount?

Mr. CLARK. A hundred thousand dollars. There are in that town United States district and circuit courts; there is there the location of the United States land office, in addition to the ordinary post-office. I apprehend that the ordinary floor space would probably cost that amount of money.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator will yield to the suggestion I made as to appropriating one-half of the sum for the next fiscal year.

Mr. CLARK. Surely. That is all right. Let the clerks prepare the amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification will be made at the desk. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound, in cloth, for the use of the Senate Committee on Rules, 1,000 copies of the last edition of the Senate Manual.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORAKER. I present an amendment which at the proper time I intend to propose to the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900. I ask that it may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask to have the amendment read.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to its being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill making appropriations for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, it is proposed to add:

And provided further, That no franchises or concessions of any kind whatever shall be granted by the United States, or by any authority whatever for which the United States is responsible, in the island of Cuba during the occupation thereof by the United States: And provided further, That the pacification of the island of Cuba having been accomplished, the President is hereby authorized to withdraw the military forces of the United States therefrom, and to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in the absence of objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to be inserted at the end of line 10, on page 4. It proposes to appropriate $55,000 for the necessary improvements and addition to the post-office at Minneapolis. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate at this late hour more than to say that this post-office was completed in 1889, ten years ago; that the business since that time has more than doubled, trebled, in fact; that the force of employees is nearly three times as great, and the business is so crowded that a large number of the men have to work in the basement under the sidewalk.

Mr. ALLISON. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations is preparing an amendment covering that exact case. This is one of the bills that passed both Houses to-day, and I hope the Senator will allow it to be passed over for a moment, since the clerk is preparing an amendment to cover all these cases.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; if it comes in with all the others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The present occupant of the chair desires to have unanimous consent to modify the amendment for the public building at Nashua, N. H., so as to provide that one-half of the amount shall be appropriated during the next fiscal year. Is unanimous consent given? The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Some time ago I offered to the pending measure an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to obtain certain information relative to Confederate cemeteries. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] as to what disposition was made of that amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina was duly considered. We ascertained that in the War Department the inquiry proposed in the amendment is already being made by a very competent man, and that the statistics and data called for in this amendment can be procured and will be procured without making an additional appropriation, as proposed to be authorized in the amendment.

Mr. PRITCHARD. That statement is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. GORMAN. At the request of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to grant permits, under proper regulations, to either of the two electric-lighting companies doing business in the District of Columbia to repair, enlarge, extend, and connect with public parks or reservations, and public or private buildings, their existing conduits, and to lease and use for electric-lighting purposes any conduit carrying electric wires that is or may be duly authorized by law: And provided further, That after one year from the passage of this act no corporation or person shall operate or maintain overhead electric-light wires on Pennsylvania avenue, or in any street within the fire limits north of Pennsylvania avenue, in the District of Columbia, under a penalty of $50 for every day during which such operation or maintenance continues, which penalty may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction: And provided further, That in every conduit constructed or reconstructed under the provisions of this section three ducts shall be reserved for the free use of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask whence comes the proposed amendment?

Mr. GORMAN. I offered the amendment at the request of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHANDLER. I make the point of order on the amendment. It is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ALLISON. I move now an amendment which is intended to cover all the public-building measures that have passed the two Houses and the public-building amendments that have been agreed to within the last few moments, including Selma and Nashua.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator from Iowa offers his amendment, I wish to offer an amendment so that it will come in at the proper place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa withhold his amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I withhold it for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Durham and State of North Carolina, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $125,000.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

Mr. BUTLER. Durham is one of the largest and most important towns in my State. The internal-revenue receipts in that town are over $600,000 a year. It deserves a public building as much as any other town in the State. Ten years ago a public building should have been erected there. The Senate and House reports set forth the importance of a public building. Here are the reports.

This amendment in the form of a bill has passed the Senate twice, and is favorably reported by the House committee.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the maximum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, the Chair will state.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from North Carolina will reduce it to $75,000, at least.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the population?

Mr. BUTLER. About 15,000, and it will be over 20,000 in a few years.

Mr. SPOONER. Are there United States courts there?

Mr. BUTLER. No; but it is one of the most important commercial centers in my State. I accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$75,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment covering all these public buildings, so far as I know.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is Durham, N. C., in?

Mr. ALLISON. He has already put that in.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of sites and toward the erection, within the respective limits of cost, of public buildings at the following places, namely: Indianapolis, Ind., $250,000; Fitchburg, Mass., $50,000; Brunswick, Ga., $25,000; Elgin, Ill., $50,000; Kansas City, Kans., $75,000; Lawrence, Mass., $50,000; Jamestown, N. Y., $37,500; New Iberia, La., $25,000; Tampa, Fla., $50,000; Rome, N. Y., $25,000; Elmira, N. Y., $12,500; Joliet, Ill., $50,000; New Brunswick, N. J., $50,000; Eau Claire, Wis., $25,000; Elizabeth City, N. C., $25,000; Newport, Vt., $25,000; Monmouth, Ill., $25,000; Oskaloosa, Iowa, $25,000; Creston, Iowa, $25,000; Clinton, Iowa, $50,000; Bristol, Tenn., $25,000; Streator, Ill., $25,000; Joplin, Mo., $25,000; Fergus Falls, Minn., $37,500; Aberdeen, S. Dak., $43,500; Abilene, Tex., $37,500; New Brighton, Pa., $37,500; Blair, Nebr., $21,500; Oakland, Cal., $125,000; Beaumont, Tex., $37,500; Wilkesbarre, Pa., $22,500; Butte, Mont., $100,000; Salt Lake, Utah, $150,000; Seattle, Wash., $150,000; Annapolis, Md., $50,000; St. Cloud, Minn., $25,000; Stockton, Cal., $40,950; Janesville, Wis., $25,000; Anniston, Ala., $25,000; Salem, Oreg., $50,000; Norwich, Conn., $50,000; Winston, N. C., $25,000; Leadville, Colo., $25,000; Lockport, N. Y., $25,000; Deadwood, S. Dak., $50,000; Freeport, Ill., $37,500; Hastings, Nebr., $13,000; Norfolk, Nebr., $7,000; Menominee, Mich., $25,000; Nashua, N. H., $30,000; in all $2,447,440; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the completion of each of said buildings within its respective limit of cost.

For post-office at Brooklyn, N. Y.: For purchase of the property known as lot 34, block 20, Ward 4, lying on the east side of Washington street 175 feet north of Johnson street, and 122 feet 10 inches south of Tillary street, in the city of Brooklyn and State of New York, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in said city of Brooklyn, $30,000.

For court-house and post-office at Omaha, Nebr.: For purchase of site and erection of building under present limit, $150,000.

For public building at Canton, Ohio: For addition to building, $15,000.

For post-office at Minneapolis, Minn.: For constructing a basement and one-story addition, including all necessary changes and alterations in the present building, $55,000.

For post-office and court-house at Macon, Ga.: For extending and enlarging the building, and for purchase of additional ground on Third street for this purpose, $58,000.

For post-office at Hot Springs, Ark.: For construction of a building on the permanent reservation owned by the United States at Hot Springs, Ark., and at such spot therein as may be selected and set apart by the Secretary of the Interior and accepted by the Secretary of the Treasury for such purpose, $30,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of said building within the present limit of cost.

For custom-house and post-office at Dubuque, Iowa: For improving and enlarging the building, $50,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the completion of said building within the present limit of cost.

For post-office at Springfield, Mass.: For extending and enlarging the building, $30,000.

For post-office at Columbus, Ga.: For extending and enlarging the building and to purchase additional ground in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, including all necessary repairs to the present structure, $25,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the completion of said building within the present limit of cost.

For court-house at Jackson, Miss.: For erection of an addition within the present limit of cost, $31,000.

For post-office at Cleveland, Ohio: For purchase of site, being block of land located in the city of Cleveland which is bounded by Rockwell street on the north, by Wood street on the east, by Superior street on the south, and on the west by the land now owned by the United States upon which the post-office building is located, and commencement of building, within the limit of cost, $300,000.

For custom-house at Baltimore, Md.: For purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in said city, $100,000.

For public building at Hartford, Conn.: For constructing an addition to the building, $37,500; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of said building within the present limit of cost.

Mr. BACON. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa. I understand that the amendment proposed by him is one which allows a certain proportion of the total ultimate cost as the present appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. That I can see the reason for in cases where there are buildings to be erected. I could not catch from the reading whether the same rule was applied in the case of two existing public buildings which are to be enlarged in the State of Georgia, one in Columbus and the other in Macon.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not sure about Columbus, but I understand that the appropriation is $58,000 for Macon and that it is appropriated for in full by this amendment. As to the other building, I am not quite clear.

Mr. BACON. I am of the impression, from what I heard read, that the full amount is included as to Macon. I was simply going to suggest that while the rule adopted by the Senator in the amendment in the case of buildings to be erected is a good rule, in cases where there are improvements to be made the rule might not work so well, for the reason that the building has to be dismantled to a large extent and it is necessary that it should be rapidly completed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the Secretary turn to that part of the amendment.

Mr. BACON. In the case of Columbus, Ga., I think possibly it is the full amount. I have sent to the Secretary's office to get the bill in order that I may see what is the amount appropriated in the House bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

For post office and court-house at Macon, Ga.: For extending and enlarging the building and for purchase of additional ground on Third street for this purpose, $58,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the full amount.

The Secretary read as follows:

For post-office at Columbus, Ga.: For extending and enlarging the building, etc., $25,000.

Mr. BACON. Is that the full amount?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the full amount. Now, there is one thing I wish to state before this amendment is agreed to. The Senator from California had the bill relating to Stockton amended and I think asked for a committee of conference.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, we do not know what the committee of conference may do as to the bill.

Mr. WHITE. We have an idea.

Mr. ALLISON. If they should come to an agreement, I think we should add, say, $75,000 for Los Angeles. Not exceeding $150,000 is the limit.

Mr. WHITE. Whatever may be the desire of the Senator from Iowa regarding that matter will be satisfactory to me. I simply wish that the bill shall go through in connection with this measure. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, it involves the insertion of the Los Angeles and Stockton items, limiting the primary expense in the case of Los Angeles to $75,000 and fixing the limit in accordance with the bill. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if I am right in this regard?

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

Mr. PASCO. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that the limit of cost in the case of the public building at Tampa has not yet been settled. It is being adjusted or is expected to be adjusted by the committee of conference, but I see no harm in letting the amendment remain as it is, and it can be made the subject of settlement hereafter in conference if necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. It can be settled in conference. A good many of these matters will be settled in conference. I offer the following relating to Los Angeles, to be inserted at the end of the provision, leaving the number of dollars blank.

Mr. WHITE. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Addition to building at Los Angeles, Cal., $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the construction of said addition at a cost not exceeding ——— dollars.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that he is mistaken in his understanding as to the amount appropriated in the House bill for the enlargement of the public building at Columbus, Ga. The amount is $50,000 in that bill. I wish to state to the Senator that both in Columbus and in Macon these are buildings in which the Federal court is held.

The improvements are not simply for ornamental purposes, but there is a Federal court that sits in each one of those cities, and the buildings are utterly inadequate to the necessities of the courts. It is for that reason that their enlargement in each instance has been recommended. I would suggest to the Senator that while the rule of proportioning the amount in the case of buildings is one which would work without any disadvantage, in the case of an improvement it is necessary that the whole amount shall be made available, because, as I said before, in these improvements the buildings have to be dismantled, and it is necessary that the work shall be done promptly.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the purchase of a site required there also?

Mr. BACON. No, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. No land is to be purchased?

Mr. BACON. I have the bill before me.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope we will occupy very little time about it, and that the building at Columbus, Ga., shall be provided for in full.

The SECRETARY. Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty" before the word "thousand."

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to mislead the Senator. It says "to purchase additional ground." I suppose that means simply immediately adjoining for the purpose of enlargement; but that would amount practically to very little.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a part of the $50,000.

Mr. BACON. It is a part of the $50,000, and from what I know of the value of ground there, it would be a very small proportion of the total amount. The amount will be expended in building.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be so modified, by making it $50,000, and changing the total accordingly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be regarded as open, and the amendment to the amendment agreed to. It is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask that a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury—

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will be content to put the letter into the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that it be put in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to have the amendment adopted and to have the RECORD show the letter from the Supervising Architect to the Secretary of the Treasury, on which the amendment is based.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 10, insert:

For public building at Cheyenne, Wyo.: For additional expenses, $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect of the 17th instant, submitting an estimate for a further appropriation of $25,000 for the public building at Cheyenne, Wyo.

Respectfully, yours,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1899.

SIR: Your attention is respectfully called to the fact that after the excavation was done under the contract for excavation, grading, concrete foundations, stone footings, brickwork and cut-stone work of basement and area walls, etc., of the public building at Cheyenne, Wyo., it was discovered that the condition of the stratum encountered was such as to render it inexpedient to place the foundations designed thereon, a material being encountered which, uncovered and coming in contact with water, became particularly soft, a condition which the ordinary tests applied to foundations before excavation would not reveal.

After a very careful study of the problem it was decided to place sub-structure work in order to distribute the weight over a larger area, at an expense of $23,185.

The appropriation for this building is much smaller in comparison to its size than for any other building of like character now being constructed under the direction of this office, and it is impossible to carry out the original design unless additional appropriation is made to cover the cost of the sub-structure work.

Nevertheless, had it not been necessary to incur this expense, which it was impossible to foresee at the time the original estimate was made, the building as originally designed could have been built inside of the appropriation; but on account of this additional expense it is out of the question to build the building without material modifications, which modifications, considering the limited amount of money originally available for the building, will seriously affect both its appearance and its usefulness.

In view of the above I have respectfully to recommend that Congress be asked to provide, at its present session, an additional appropriation of $25,000 to cover the cost of the contract above mentioned and certain work incidental thereto.

The fact is also brought to your attention that this building is situated at a distance from large and cheap markets, which renders it necessary to have a larger, rather than a less, appropriation than is required in other localities; also that the entire cost of the site was only $11,147.51.

Respectfully, yours,

J. K. TAYLOR, Supervising Architect.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I hope the bill may be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I have here two amendments which I desire to submit to the Senate. I will say concerning them that if the Senator from Iowa and those who may be conferees with him consider that they should not be adopted, I am perfectly willing to acquiesce with him; but I think that they ought to be incorporated in the measure, and I will submit them to him.

Mr. ALLISON. Are those the amendments the Senator spoke to me about to-day?

Mr. WHITE. They are the same.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to their being inserted, although my own belief is that there have been some subsequent statutes modifying those sections of the Revised Statutes. But the conferees will look into the matter.

Mr. WHITE. I am prepared to furnish data to the Senator from Iowa. If I fail to do it, I will not raise any question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 6, after the word "expended," insert:

In the manner provided by section 2223 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

And in lines 9 and 10, same page, strike out:

By such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments in the Senate?

Mr. BUTLER. On page 68, line 19, I move to amend the committee's amendment by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifty."

The SECRETARY. In line 19, page 68, amend the committee amendment by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "fifty," so as to read:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $250,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the amendment I offered in Committee of the Whole which the Senator from Iowa requested me to temporarily withdraw. I ask that the reasons for this amendment, which are tabulated, be put in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APPROPRIATION FOR TOPOGRAPHIC SURVEYS IN THE UNITED STATES.

In support of the amendment to increase the appropriation from $200,000 to $250,000.

As showing the demand for this increased appropriation asked for, at least eight States (New York, Pennsylvania, Maine, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama) are now offering to cooperate with the Government survey to the extent of paying one-half of all expenses connected with the work in each of these States, if Congress will only increase the appropriation as requested, in order to push this work more rapidly; and the question of a similar cooperation is being agitated in other States. The amount needed to meet this demand is $75,000.

The Government Survey is unable to meet these offers unless the increase asked for is allowed. The work now in progress in other States and Territories can not justly be discontinued in order to meet this demand for cooperation in these new areas.

It will be seen that in this proposed cooperative work the surveys will cost the Government just one-half of what they would otherwise cost.

MASSACHUSETTS.

In cooperation with the State of Massachusetts, the United States Geological Survey has completed a detailed topographic map of the entire area of its territory, at an expense of $40,000 appropriated by the State and $67,845 appropriated by the Federal Government.

The resulting maps saved to the city of Worcester alone, in one case of litigation as to source of water supply, the sum of $3,000,000, according to the statement of the city engineer. Sums aggregating perhaps an equal amount have been saved other cities, according to statements of Chief Engineer Swain, of the State board of health, who has found these maps indispensable in the prosecution of his investigations.

These maps made ten years ago require now some revision to keep them up to date. A new large-scale survey of the metropolitan district of Boston, commenced last year at the urgent request of various engineering departments of the city of Boston, will remain uncompleted this year unless the appropriation for topographic surveys can be increased by Congress from $200,000 to $250,000, as the demands for new surveys in other regions are even more urgent.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TOPOGRAPHIC SURVEYS.

For 1892 the appropriation was.....	$250,000
We ask that it be restored to that figure.
For 1897-98 the appropriation was.....	180,000
Of that there was required to be spent in the semiarid region.....	$35,000
Required west of the one hundredth meridian.....	48,000
Required administrative expenses.....	12,000
	95,000
Remainder left for topographic work in the Mississippi Valley and Eastern States.....	85,000
Needed for cooperation in Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama.....	75,000
Remainder for surveys in the great iron, coal, and oil regions of the Mississippi Valley and Eastern States other than those named above.....	10,000

1898-99.

The present bill, as it comes from the House, transfers $30,000 from forestry surveys to general topographic surveys for the entire United States. Supposing half of this to be available for States of the Mississippi Valley and the East, and this gives for the surveys of the great iron, coal, and oil regions of the Mississippi Valley and Eastern States other than those mentioned above..... 20,000

It can not be fairly claimed that the appropriation carried by the present bill of $130,000 for investigation and maps in the Western forest reservation means any increase for topographic maps in the country at large where they are needed and where this urgent demand for the increase comes from. And while the House bill removes the barriers by allowing the Director of the Survey to use the entire appropriation wherever in his judgment the needs are greatest, yet the demand from these Western regions for this work is also great, and the amounts formerly used in the West are still needed there and can not be transferred to the East.

COOPERATIVE TOPOGRAPHIC SURVEYS ACCOMPLISHED OR IN PROGRESS.

The following table shows what cooperative surveys have been completed or are in progress. It gives an index to cost of making topographic surveys on scale of 1 mile to 1 inch, with contours 20 feet apart vertically:

State.	Area.	Area mapped.	Total cost.	Appropriated by State.
	Sq. miles.	Sq. miles.
Massachusetts.....	8,315	All.	$107,845	$40,000
Connecticut.....	4,900	All.	53,555	25,000
Rhode Island.....	1,250	All.	11,212	5,000
New Jersey.....	7,815	All.	85,965	40,000
New York.....	49,170	18,515	216,000	86,000
Maryland.....	12,210	8,470	35,000	7,000

Estimated cost of mapping any other area, scale 1 mile to 1 inch, varies from $10 to $15 a square mile, according to ruggedness of country.

The average cost of mapping the Southern and Western States on scale of 1 inch to 2 miles is from $5 to $8 per square mile, according to character of country.

The Federal Government to bear half the expense at the above rates.

Unaided, a State could not make similar survey in twice the time for three times the cost, because States would have to train skilled topographers and bear in addition heavy administrative expenses.

CHARACTER OF TOPOGRAPHIC MAP.

Scales, 1 mile to 1 inch and 2 miles to 1 inch.

Elevations shown for every 20 to 100 feet difference in height by contour lines of that distance apart.

Exact elevation recorded on ground by bench marks, 1 in every 3 square miles.

Exact horizontal position recorded on ground by triangulation stations, 1 in every 10 square miles.

Maps show (1) exact plan of every road, railroad, street, trail, path, and public boundary line; (2) every river, lake, and stream; (3) shapes, elevations, grades of every rise or fall in the surface of the land.

METHOD OF EXPENDITURE.

State appropriation expended in actual field work, living expenses, and services of temporary employees resident in State.

The State is at no cost to maintain a commission or pay salaries of State officials or for administrative machinery. The appropriation of the Federal Government is expended partly in field work, partly in salaries of permanent employees, and small amount goes toward general administrative expenditures.

Total appropriation of State is returned to people of State with at least 60 per cent interest, the latter being that portion of appropriation of Federal Government expended in the area under survey.

OBJECT OF THE UNITED STATES IN COOPERATING.

The total appropriation for topographic surveys by the Federal Government is divided pro rata among the States.

That the Federal Survey may complete the mapping of the United States, it diverts larger sums to such States as cooperate.

The Federal Survey pushes its topographic map by this means in any locality in which it may produce the largest result at the least expense to the Government.

This is done that the topographic map may be had at earliest date as a base for further studies of economic resources, hydrography, forestry, etc.

METHODS OF PUBLICATION.

Topographic maps produced by cooperative surveys are engraved on copper and printed on stone on the highest style of cartography, without expense to the State.

Editions of 2,000 copies are printed of all atlas sheets and sold by the United States Survey under law at $2 per 100 sheets, or 5 cents per sheet.

Transfers from the copperplates may be furnished States, if desired to print their own edition.

BENEFITS TO STATE FROM COOPERATION.

The State gains a complete topographic map of its area.

There are established throughout the State triangulation monuments, which will furnish accurate datum points for all other State or private surveys.

Throughout the State are established bench marks or permanent monuments, furnishing datum level elevations for the future determinations of height for public or private engineering purposes.

Meridian marks are established at each county seat as aids to county and local surveyors in determining declination of their compasses.

The State benefits from the wide experience of the Geological Survey, which has made a close study of economical and rapid methods and of instruments especially adapted to topographical surveying.

A geological survey of the area follows the cooperative topographic survey. The economic and mineral resources of the State are pointed out and developed as a result of the geological survey.

The waterways and mill powers and other water resources of the State are examined, studied, and reported upon by the hydrographic survey which follows.

The forest resources of the State are mapped and discussed in the study of forestry which follows.

All the above surveys lead to the expenditure of a larger portion of Federal appropriations in the State.

OBJECTS AND USES OF TOPOGRAPHIC MAPS.

The objects and uses of topographic maps are:

1. Educational, (a) by promoting an exact knowledge of the country; (b) by serving teachers and pupils in geographic studies.

2. Practical, as the preliminary maps for planning engineering projects. Highways, electric roads, railroads, aqueducts, and sewerage plants may be laid out on them, and the cost or preliminary surveys may be saved. Water supply, catchment areas, reservoir sites, and canals may be ascertained from these maps.

3. Political. In all questions relating to political or legislative matters they afford accurate information as to relations of boundaries and towns to natural features.

4. Administrative and military, in all questions relating to Federal or State administration of the public works, as canals, reservations, parks, highways, and also as military base maps on which to plan works of offense, defense, camps, marches, etc.

5. Statistical, as base maps for the graphic representation of all facts relating to population, industries, products, or other statistical information.

6. Economic. As means for showing the location, extent, and accessibility of lands, waters, forests, and valuable minerals, these maps are indispensable to owners, investors, and corporations.

COMMENDATION OF COOPERATIVE SURVEYS.

Commendation of cooperative topographic maps has been general on the part of all civil and mining engineers of prominence, geologists, colleges, chambers of commerce, and prominent citizens, where the maps are understood.

Where the maps exist they are generally used by the public.

They have been indorsed in resolutions of American Society of Civil Engineers, of New York Chamber of Commerce, of New York Academy of Sciences, American Geographic Society, etc.

Their service to railways has been set forth in letters by chief engineer New York Central Railroad, Pennsylvania Railroad, of Baltimore and Ohio, of Chesapeake and Ohio, of Southern, and of practically every railway of note in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. One moment, before the bill passes. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to page 34, line 21. I wish to strike out "five" and insert "seven." That is the amount estimated at page 56 of the Estimates.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done before the third reading.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator's proposed amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. On page 34, line 21, strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The SECRETARY. In line 21, page 34, strike out "five" before "hundred" and insert "seven;" so as to read:

Division of fish culture—Office: Assistant in charge, $2,700.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CODE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments to the bill (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Territories reported in the bill as heretofore modified be considered as agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the Alaska bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. All the amendments have been read and I suppose there is no objection to them. They might be considered as agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is time to go to bed now.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Alabama will withhold his motion for adjournment for the time being, I will ask him to yield for a motion to adjourn to the hour of 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PETTUS. I have no objection to the motion if there is nothing else to be done.

Mr. CARTER. I move that when the Senate adjourn it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 8; and (at 11 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 1, 1899, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RELOCATION OF TRACKS OF CITY AND SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following conference report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (S. R. 189) to promote the relocation of certain tracks of the City and Suburban Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted as a proviso insert the following:

"Providing upon completion by said City and Suburban Railway of the underground construction hereinbefore provided for the obligation of the said City and Suburban Railway imposed by section 2 of the act approved June 27, 1898, in respect to the construction of its line on North Capitol street north of T street shall cease, and in lieu of that provision said City and Suburban Railway is required, within six months after North Capitol street shall have been graded, to construct and operate a double-track railway on North Capitol street from T street to Michigan avenue, thence on Michigan avenue east to connect with its present tracks on Bunker Hill road.

"Said railway on North Capitol street north of T street and on Michigan avenue is to be operated by the overhead trolley system; but the right to operate an overhead trolley on North Capitol street shall cease and determine on July 1, 1904, or whenever after that date the said street shall be paved, and the said company shall, on and after said date or paving as aforesaid, operate the said portion of its line by the underground electric system."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference agree to this amendment, amended to permit the use of the overhead trolley only north of T street on North Capitol street, and limit the time during which the overhead trolley could be used on North Capitol street to July 1, 1904, or whenever after that date North Capitol street shall be paved.

J. W. BABCOCK,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PHILADELPHIA EXPOSITION.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 242, authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Commercial Exposition to be held in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1899 to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act of Congress approved February 23, 1885, prohibiting the importation of foreigners under contract to perform labor, and the acts of Congress prohibiting the coming of Chinese persons into the United States, and the acts amendatory of these acts, shall not be construed, nor shall anything therein operate to prevent, hinder, or in any wise restrict any foreign exhibitor, representative, or citizen of a foreign nation, or the holder who is a citizen of a foreign nation of any concession or privilege from the Philadelphia Exposition Association of Pennsylvania from bringing into the United States, under contract, such mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of their respective foreign countries, as they or any of them may deem necessary for the purpose of making preparations for installing or conducting their exhibits or of preparing or installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under or by virtue of or pertaining to any concession or privilege which may have been granted by the Philadelphia Exposition Association of Pennsylvania in connection with such exposition: Provided, however, That no alien shall by virtue of this act enter the United States under contract to perform labor except by express permission, naming such alien, of the Secretary of the Treasury; and any such alien who may remain in the United States for more than three months after the close of the exposition shall thereafter be subject to all the processes and penalties applicable to aliens coming in violation of the alien contract-labor law aforesaid.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this is a report of the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. This has been approved by every member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization except one, and he was out of the city. It is simply the formal resolution passed for the Omaha and Atlanta expositions, to allow the laborers employed by foreign exhibitors to come in, which under the strict interpretation of the law they could not do. It expires at the end of three months, and is simply the formal resolution which has been passed for the other expositions.

Mr. DOCKERY. Reported by the Committee on Immigration?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. DOCKERY. And a similar bill was passed for the Omaha Exposition?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; it has to be done, for under the contract-labor law they could not come in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent that the Senate bill 5578, for the reorganization of the Army, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that it may be considered at once.

The SPEAKER. It is so referred, as a matter of course. No request is necessary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5578. An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 5548. An act to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, office of the superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation, and other civil offices in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5578. An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5548. An act to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, office of the superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation, and other civil offices in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the special order adopted by the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska demands the special order, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration House resolution No. 410, report the following as a substitute, with a recommendation that it do pass:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 28th day of February, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration in the House of bills reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as follows: First. Such bills as relate to first-class post-offices, to custom-houses, and to court-houses as have heretofore been reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Second. Such bills as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall indicate; the session of the House not to continue later than 6 o'clock p. m. of said day.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I find that if every public-building bill which was favorably reported the other day from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, excepting, of course, the New York bill, should be passed, it would entail upon the Government of the United States an expenditure running through a period of from five to seven years of $8,602,900. If the 39 bills which would come under the first clause of the rule should pass, not including the New York bill, it would entail an expenditure of $7,290,000. Not a bill which will be called up under section 1 can, I think, be criticised legitimately. I take it from the opposition made at the last sitting of the House with reference to bills reported by the Public Buildings Committee that the members who then opposed these measures are willing now, as they said they were willing then, to consider legitimately bills which provide for post-offices, custom-houses, and court-houses, either in cities of the first class or cities where courts hold sessions or where there are custom-houses doing a legitimate business entitling the place to have a custom-house building.

Under that statement, Mr. Speaker, I now call up—

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment? I understand him to state that under the first clause of the rule 39 bills will be considered?

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. How many will be considered under the second proviso of the rule with relation to the bills considered by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MERCER. Twenty-three, I believe.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman kindly state to the House the order in which it is proposed to consider the 39 bills and also the 23 bills?

Mr. MERCER. In reply to my friend from Missouri, I would say that the committee has decided to take up the bills in the order in which they passed through the Committee of the Whole as indicated in the RECORD, which is before the gentleman. If he will refer to that list, he will see the order in which they will be called up to-day. The gentleman will remember that at the last sitting I asked unanimous consent that the bills be considered in that order, and consent was given. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds thinks that in all fairness to everybody the same rule should be observed to-day.

Mr. DOCKERY. But let me suggest—of course, my friend understands I do not wish to take his time unnecessarily—

Mr. MERCER. I understand that.

Mr. DOCKERY. The order adopted by the House on the report of the Committee on Rules takes out of the regular order, as I understand, certain bills.

Mr. MERCER. It eliminates certain bills until after we get through—

Mr. DOCKERY. It makes a preferred class. Now, I would be glad to know—

Mr. MERCER. And then that eliminated class is afterwards to be taken up in the order the bills would naturally have come up.

Mr. DOCKERY. In their order on the list to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. The 23 bills, then, will be considered under the second proviso, in the order in which they were reported to the House?

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman give us the order of consideration of the 39 bills? I think it fair that we should know that.

Mr. MERCER. I will say to my friend, to save time—

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to be absolutely fair about this matter. If the order of consideration had remained as it was, we could turn to the RECORD and see what bills were to be considered or see the order of consideration.

Mr. MERCER. I refer to the RECORD of February 6, page 1519.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the order in which the bills are there given does not throw any light upon the order in which the bills of the first class, the preferred class, will be considered. Now, I want to know—and I think the House is entitled to know—just the order in which the committee propose to consider those 39 bills.

Mr. MERCER. Well, Mr. Speaker, in response to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, I will read the list.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the order in which the bills are to be considered?

Mr. MERCER. Yes, sir [reading]. Elizabeth City, N. C.; Oakland, Cal.; Elmira, N. Y.; Hot Springs, Ark.; Fitchburg, Mass.; New Brunswick, N. J.; Joliet, Ill.; Brunswick, Ga.; Cleveland, Ohio; Topeka, Kans.; Beaumont, Tex.; Dubuque, Iowa; Omaha, Nebr.; Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Jackson, Miss.; Elgin, Ill.; Minneapolis, Minn.; Butte, Mont.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Indianapolis, Ind.; Seattle, Wash.; Canton, Ohio; Springfield, Mass.; Hastings and Norfolk, Nebr.; New York City, N. Y.; Fergus Falls, Minn.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Kansas City, Kans.; Baltimore, Md.; Washington Public Library; Lawrence, Mass.; Jamestown, N. Y.; Tampa, Fla.; Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Abilene, Tex.; Newport, Vt.; Eau Claire, Wis.; Macon, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, I would ask him also to read the other list, the second class of bills, to which he has referred.

Mr. MERCER. With pleasure. They are as follows:

New Iberia, La.; Bluefields, W. Va.; Creston, Iowa; Annapolis, Md.; Janesville, Wis.; Rome, N. Y.; Clinton, Iowa; Carrollton, Ky.; Joplin, Mo.; Streator, Ill.; Stockton, Cal.; Freeport, Ill.; Bristol, Tenn.; Anniston, Ala.; Norwich, Conn.; Menominee, Mich.; Salem, Oreg.; St. Cloud, Minn.; Leadville, Colo.; Monmouth, Ill.; Oskaloosa, Iowa; Winston, N. C.; Lockport, N. Y.

Mr. DOCKERY. One other question, and I will not consume further the time of the gentleman. I desire to know whether there is any authority from the committee to change this order, either as to the first or second list?

Mr. MERCER. No. I will state that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had a meeting to-day and made this order, and I have no discretion in the matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the thirty-nine of the preferred class, has any change been made in the order in which they were reported to the House?

Mr. MERCER. None, as far as I am aware.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there should be a regular course of procedure. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. TALBERT. I only want to ask the gentleman a single question. In view of the enormous expenditures which this Congress will have to make, amounting, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] stated yesterday, to $1,600,000,000—in other words, $600,000,000 more than any other Congress—would it not be wise, I ask the gentleman from Nebraska, to defer all expenses of this character, which are not essential, and let this question go over until the state of the Treasury is somewhat improved?

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ELIZABETH CITY, N. C.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1088) to provide for the erection of a public building at Elizabeth City, N. C., reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments; on which I ask the previous question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska to yield to me for a minute.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] has prepared some statistics, and desires to submit them, in connection with certain remarks upon the pending question. I ask unanimous consent of the House that he be allowed twenty minutes in which to submit the statement and figures that he has prepared.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt of the value of some of the statistics prepared by the gentleman from Georgia, for I have a few of them. But we have but a brief time to-day. I would ask the gentleman if he would not consent to accept ten minutes?

Mr. MADDOX. It will be impossible in that time—

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the time, and hope the gentleman from Nebraska will not object.

Mr. MERCER. I do not object.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman from Georgia can conclude in less than that time, of course, I am sure, he will not unnecessarily consume the time.

Mr. MERCER. Then, with the understanding that the remarks of the gentleman will close all debate on the proposition, I will agree that he shall have twenty minutes.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, of course I can not state what others may do. I have no authority to make any such agreement. I can speak only for myself.

Mr. Speaker, if I can get the attention of the House for a few brief moments I shall be glad.

In the very nature of things, in the proceedings of this body we are compelled to look to the committees of the House to get the information necessary for intelligent legislation. But it has been my experience in the six years that I have served in this body to observe that we never have any minority reports from the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee or the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. So then, if we expect information in opposition to the measures or methods of these committees, we have to look for such information elsewhere and from some one else.

I have investigated this question somewhat, and I propose to give to the House the benefit of that investigation. I want to say further to my friend from Nebraska and to other gentlemen, especially to my friends on this side of the House, that I am not now for the first time criticising this method of legislation or objecting to the appropriations which are carried by the various bills pending under the order to-day. Gentlemen who served in the Fifty-third Congress will remember that we had just such a condition of things then—a combination to get through appropriations for public buildings—and I led the opposition in the House, and was successful in defeating that combination as it then existed under the rules in force at that time.

So it does not date with these measures now. I am opposed to this method of legislation, gentlemen, for this reason—I state it now, and I state it boldly—that in my opinion there is not a single measure here proposed which, if it was left to stand alone before this House without the support of the combination, could pass this Congress in the condition in which the Treasury now is; not a single one. Now, where does it get its support from? Necessarily from a combination of interests. That is exactly the way it comes, or what down in my country is better known as logrolling; or, in other words, "You help me and I will help you."

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is too much of that sort of legislation. It ought not to be permitted in this House, but we ought to do business intelligently and upon a higher plane.

Now, I want to call your attention to one proposition for which a great many of you voted the other day, just to show you what business principles you apply to business. As the representatives of the American people you are expected to exercise some business capacity. Now, let me show you what you did. And I refer to this bill because it has passed, and nothing that I can say can now prevent the appropriation, so far as I know. Therefore I refer to it simply to call your attention to illustrate my point.

Now, what did you do the other day? You made an appropriation to build a post-office at Blair, Nebr. The original bill, I believe, was for $50,000. We have a statement of the expense incurred at that office for rent, fuel, and light for last year, and the cost of it was about $295. I have the figures here exactly, which I propose to put in the RECORD. It amounts to little more than one-half of 1 per cent on the amount of money that you propose to invest in that building. Now, let us reverse the proposition. There is not a thinking man in this House to-day who does not believe and know, if he will tell the truth, that we must issue bonds to meet the indebtedness that we are heaping upon this country. At what rate will you float them? Not less than 3 per cent—that is, you practically borrow money at 3 per cent to invest in a public building at one-half of 1 per cent. Now, that is business, is it not? There is not a business man in the United States who would be guilty of such monumental stupidity. This same calculation will apply in a more or less degree to all of them.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to some other facts. I have said that we must look elsewhere than to the committee for information. I want to show you how well the committee have taken care of themselves. According to the best calculation which I have been able to make, the States represented by members on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds receive about $5,071,000 of these appropriations.

And now there is another thing that I do not like in this transaction. We have fifteen members of that committee, every one represented in this list with the exception of one State. Some members of the committee have half a dozen bills for their States; others less. But the singular feature about the business is that we have six men from the Southern States upon that committee; and what have you got, gentlemen, as your part of the pork—six of you now, there being nine on the other side? For every dollar that the members from the South have obtained gentlemen on the other side get about $10.

A MEMBER. That is about the usual rate, is it not?

Mr. MADDOX. I believe so.

Mr. TALBERT. Buzzard-and-turkey business!

Mr. MADDOX. Now, gentlemen, if I could be induced to enter a combination to loot the Treasury of the United States I would have my full share or know the reason why.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is the gentleman basing his opposition because the South has not got its share?

Mr. MADDOX. That would be one of my reasons, if I did not have other and better ones. I am here to see that my part of the country is properly cared for, and if appropriations are to be made, right or wrong, I want my State to have its full share.

Mr. VINCENT. Do you think that the ratio of 16 to 1 is as good as the ratio of 10 to 1? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Do we understand that you are here for the purpose of looting the Treasury?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to another fact. I have taken the appropriations for the past years, and I find that the six largest Southern States—Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia—have 47 public buildings, and there has been $9,254,071.70 appropriated to those States, or on an average 86 cents per capita to the inhabitants of those States.

I now take the six New England States to which I beg to call attention—Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont. We have a grand total of appropriations of $15,912,109.75, with 53 public buildings and an average per capita of $2.54. Now mark, the six largest Southern States get a per capita of 86 cents, and the six New England States a per capita of $2.54.

Some gentlemen may raise the question that there is more wealth in that country than there is in the South. Perhaps there is under existing circumstances, but gentlemen will remember that the tax that supports this Government is not levied on the wealth of the country. I would to God that it was. It is the great toiling masses that contribute the large part of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I say, I have the full statistics here, giving the per capita amount for each State in the Union, the amount that it has received in these appropriations for public buildings, and that statement I propose to print in the RECORD.

I apprehend that what I may say to-day, or can say, will not prevent the appropriations that are to be made; but, Mr. Speaker, I want to say I am not only opposed to this method of legislation because the condition of the National Treasury at this time is such that you will have to borrow money in order to carry out the projects you have under consideration to-day, but I am opposed to it because away down in the country where I live, in my section, there are hard times.

Hundreds of people in my country are even suffering for the absolute necessities of life. These people will have to pay the tax, in part, for this money that you propose to-day to appropriate to erect these public buildings. You are laying a burden upon them; that is what you are doing; an addition to the already crushing ones that rest upon them to-day. And I do not hesitate to-day to say, Mr. Speaker, if it were possible to get my friends to realize the real condition of the people and they would aid me, upon this side of the House or upon that side, I would stop these appropriations; I would not lay upon the people any additional taxation that is not absolutely necessary at this time.

There are some things that are appropriate at one time that are entirely inappropriate at another. If the condition of the Treasury and if the condition of the country were such as to admit of these appropriations, that would be a different thing. But what are the conditions that confront every man upon this floor? I say that every one of you know it—you are bound to know—that we must borrow the money to meet a considerable amount of the appropriations authorized by this Congress.

Are you going to mortgage the rising generation for this purpose? Why, I know exactly the condition in which many of you are placed. Your friends are appealing to you on personal grounds to support these measures in order that they may get their particular bill through. My friends have appealed to me in the same way. It is the taxpayers that we represent and whose interest we should protect. Let these bills stand upon their own merits, independent of the combination, and I guarantee you can not pass a single one of them.

How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. MADDOX. In those six minutes I want to call attention to the per capita tax and to show you what has been done.

Alabama, five public buildings; amount appropriated, $1,138,604.75; per capita, 75 cents.

Mr. TALBERT. That is not in these bills.

Mr. MADDOX. These are former appropriations.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What are these appropriations for?

Mr. MADDOX. These are appropriations that have been made formerly for public buildings.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Running how far back?

Mr. MADDOX. For all time. These are the appropriations.

Mr. BRUCKER. These figures which you have read show the per capita amount appropriated for public buildings exclusively in those different States?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. BRUCKER. How does it come that Wyoming has a per capita appropriation of something like four times as much as some of the States you have named?

Mr. MADDOX. I can not tell that. I was not here when those appropriations were made.

Mr. ADAMSON. Because the House was big and the folks were few.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to call your attention to the present bills, to what the bills appropriate, and the character of the bills.

Appropriations for all Southern States, bills pending—that is, now pending or were when this committee began their work—$1,629,000; Western States, $8,160,000; Eastern States, $2,850,000.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that probably these figures, those that have been furnished by the gentleman from Nebraska and those furnished by myself heretofore, will become guide to future Congresses in their appropriations for public buildings.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the gentleman from Georgia think it would be well if the bills went over until the next session, under the present condition of the Treasury?

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman from South Carolina asks if I do not think it would be well, under the present conditions, to allow the bills to go over until the next session. I am perfectly willing they should go over myself; in fact, I think they ought to go over until the finances of the country get in better condition than they now are.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has referred to these bills providing for certain buildings in the State of Georgia which are embraced among the bills that are to be considered, and he has asserted that there is some sort of a combination to pass these bills. I want my friend and colleague to understand, and I know he will appreciate and believe it, that, so far as I am concerned, and I think I can speak for the other gentlemen in whose particular districts are located some of these bills, that so far as any combination is concerned—

Mr. MADDOX. I thought my colleague wanted to ask a question, and not to make a speech in my time.

Mr. BARTLETT (continuing). I want to ask if the gentleman believes that I or these gentlemen who have bills here have entered into any combination to pass these bills which we have introduced, whether they are good or bad, or to pass any other bills which other gentlemen have introduced, regardless of their merit?

Mr. MADDOX. I do not believe that my colleague is a party to any such combination.

Mr. MERCER was recognized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BARTLETT. I want about five minutes.

Mr. MERCER. Will two minutes do the gentleman? I yield to the gentleman from Georgia two minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I am as much opposed to spending the public money for unnecessary purposes as any man on the floor of the House. I am as much opposed to the issuing of bonds in times of peace by this Government for any purpose as any other man. I represent a constituency upon whom taxation falls as heavily as it does upon any locality; but, Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself alone, with reference to this bill that is reported by this committee in favor of the building now established and to be improved in the city in which I live, I desire to say that any suggestion that I have entered into combination with other gentlemen by agreement, by intention, or by acts—and I am authorized to say the same as to my other two colleagues—is an unwarranted one.

I introduced the bill to add to and improve the public building at Macon, Ga. I laid before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the fact which authorized this report, and I desire to say that at no time have I ever been before the committee to urge an appropriation other than submit the facts; but I submitted reports from officers in charge of the building, the postmaster, the United States marshal, and the United States revenue officers, the clerk of the court, letters from the judge, and a report of a special agent of the Treasury Department who went down by my request to investigate the condition of the building and what was required to furnish necessary room and facilities to transact the public business, and he reported that the buildings should be improved and what additions were necessary, and recommended twice the amount that I asked for in the original bill as necessary; and it was on this evidence and these reports upon which the committee acted.

This is a bill that I introduced, and this is a bill the committee have reported. If there are any bills before the House that do not deserve to be passed, I shall not vote for them; but if in my State or any State, there is a bill providing for a public building for the benefit of the public and to meet the necessities of the public business, I shall vote for it, and the constituency I have the honor to represent upon this floor, which is as intelligent and upright as any in Georgia or in any State in the Union, will approve my vote, and to them I will answer without fear or doubt.

Mr. MADDOX. Did the gentleman vote for the Blair bill?

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed.

The question was taken on the passage; and on a division (called for by Mr. MADDOX) there were—ayes 111, noes 14.

Mr. MADDOX. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-one gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused; the ayes have it, and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OAKLAND, CAL.

Mr. MERCER. I call up Senate bill 706.

The bill (S. 706) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a public building at Oakland, in the State of California, was read by its title.

Mr. MERCER. This bill calls for a public building at Oakland, Cal. The gross receipts there are over $100,000. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I guess we had better have the bill read.

Mr. MERCER. We are not obliged to have the bill read under the rule.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we shall not have to take any of these bills "sight and unseen."

Mr. MERCER. This bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think we had better have the bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERMAN). The Chair thinks it is not necessary to read the bill in full; certainly not before it is engrossed.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, let me make a suggestion. So far as I am concerned, I propose to make no factious or unjust opposition to these bills—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Missouri upon the question of order involved.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not want to be driven to resort to a demand for the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill; but I think that in justice, equity, and fair dealing and in harmony with the practice of the House—

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me—

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). We are entitled to the reading of the bill under the rule.

Mr. MERCER. This bill is identical with a House bill the passage of which has been recommended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In regard to the right to have the bill read, the Chair a moment ago gave simply his impression. He would prefer not to rule positively on the question before looking it up. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Nebraska that the bill be read by unanimous consent.

Mr. MERCER. I did not understand the suggestion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair suggests that without a ruling on the point now the gentleman from Nebraska ask unanimous consent for the reading of the bill. Before the next bill is reached the Chair will look the question up.

Mr. MERCER. I will state to the Chair that on page 1614 of the RECORD there will be found a ruling of the Speaker of the House on this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be very glad to examine that ruling.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me say a word.

Mr. MERCER. Let the bill be read to save time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does that apply to the other bills which are to follow?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill. Pending the reading, the Chair will look up the ruling to which the gentleman from Nebraska has referred.

The bill was read.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. DOCKERY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 17 voting in favor thereof.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ELMIRA, N. Y.

Mr. MERCER. I now call up House bill No. 11861.

The bill (H. R. 11861) for the erection of a public building at Elmira, N. Y., was read by its title.

The SPEAKER. The question is—

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the bill to be read? If there be no objection, it will be read.

The bill was read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, there were on a division (called for by Mr. DOCKERY)—ayes 86, noes 9.
So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up now the bill (H. R. 1139) to provide for a building for the use of the post-office, office of the superintendent of the Hot Springs Reservation, and other civil offices in the city of Hot Springs, Ark., on which I move the previous question, on the bill and amendments, to its passage.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, there being on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDOX)—ayes 91, noes 7.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that point.

Mr. MADDOX. Then there is no quorum present. I make that point. We had as well have the people here if we are to pass on these bills.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). One hundred and seventy-eight members and over are present—a quorum.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote last taken was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FITCHBURG, MASS.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 521) for the erection of a public building at Fitchburg, Mass.

The bill was read at length, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

Mr. MERCER. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDOX) there were—ayes 109, noes 11.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I insist that this business should be done constitutionally, if it is to be done at all, and that we should have a quorum present all the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, they do not vote.

The SPEAKER. They count, if they do not vote. [Laughter and applause.]

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11893) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of New Brunswick, N. J., on which I move the previous question on the bill and amendments of the committee to its passage.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask if it is in order to have the bill read and the report in every case when these bills are called up for consideration in the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. TALBERT. Are we not entitled to the reading of the report, or must we vote in the dark upon these bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that it is the duty, strictly speaking, of each member to read the report in these cases; but it is not a matter of right to have that report read in the House.

Mr. TALBERT. But suppose a member has not attended to what the Speaker calls "his duty." Is it not his right, under the practice of the House, and in order to have a proper understanding of these matters—for we can not without such information get at the drift of this "hog combine"—is it not his privilege and his right as well to have the report read on the floor of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already answered the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT. But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DOCKERY. If the Chair will permit me, I would like to have the Chair rule on one question suggested by the gentleman from South Carolina.

I am satisfied that he has no right to have the reports read; but has a member not the right to insist upon the reading of the bill on which he is called to vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on that question when the next bill is before the House, if the question is presented.

The question now is on the demand for the previous question on the bill which has been read.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Has this bill been properly engrossed, Mr. Speaker? If not, I ask that it be laid aside, because I should like to hear the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The time, the Chair will state to the gentleman, for demanding the reading of the bill has not yet come.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed copy of the bill not being at the desk, it will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. TALBERT. I will not insist upon the demand. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed bill.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JOLIET, ILL.

Mr. MERCER. I call up the bill (H. R. 10962) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Joliet, in the State of Illinois.

The title of the bill and the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were read.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments, to its passage.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of securing the ruling of the Chair, I ask as a matter of right that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest—

Mr. DOCKERY. If the Chair, however, has any great doubt about the matter, I do not want to press for a ruling.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very glad to have any suggestion from any member, and without undertaking to rule upon the question generally, the Chair will give his idea about the present situation, which is that a bill, when it comes up for consideration, after being reported from the Committee of the Whole, and having been read in Committee of the Whole, has not within my recollection been again read as of right in the House.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage, on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDOX) there were—ayes 121, noes 11.

Accordingly the bill passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRUNSWICK, GA.

Mr. MERCER. I call up the bill H. R. 447.

The bill (H. R. 447) for the erection of a custom-house and post-office building at Brunswick, Ga., was read by title, and the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were read.

Mr. MERCER. I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments, to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. DOCKERY) there were—ayes 125, noes 9.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The next business laid before the House was the bill (S. 1056) to provide for a public building at Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the bill and amendment to its passage.

Mr. BRUCKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does it relate to the question before the House?

Mr. BRUCKER. If the previous question is ordered, is twenty minutes' discussion permissible after ordering the previous question on each bill?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENLARGING PUBLIC BUILDING AT TOPEKA, KANS.

The next business laid before the House was the bill (H. R. 4076) for enlarging the public building at Topeka, Kans.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the bill and amendment to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments recommended by the Committees of the Whole House on the state of the Union were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MADDOX. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Nine gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number; and yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a remark or two right at this stage. It will not take but a minute. I desire to say that up to this time those of us who have endeavored to stop—

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen is not in order.

Mr. MADDOX. I know; but—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to make his statement before the passage of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, sir; or after it.

Mr. MERCER. Wait until the bill is passed, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it; and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATEMENT.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia be allowed two minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, we have gone far enough in these proceedings—that is to say, those of us who are opposed to this class of legislation—to find out that we are not supported by the House to any extent. There are not enough members opposed to these bills to give us the yeas and nays even and to put on record how they are voting and let the country know who favors this legislation. That being true, I think it would be unjust to some members who have bills away down on the Calendar to stand here and filibuster any longer. It does not amount to anything.

If we could accomplish anything, there might be something in it; but we can only waste time and possibly defeat some measure just as meritorious as, and perhaps more so than, those that have already passed. Furthermore, I might say it is the determination of the Committee on Rules to see that these bills go through. We can not avoid it, and therefore I propose to say that I have conscientiously discharged my duty; and now, so far as I am concerned, I do not propose to fight any longer.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I would greatly prefer that course if it could be done—to pass that entire 65 bills in one batch, as the House has determined to pass them. I desire a moment or two to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be recognized—for how long?

Mr. DOCKERY. Only a moment.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this is not a novel situation to me. I have confronted like conditions in former Congresses. I do not charge that members have combined to pass these bills. I do not make that accusation, but I do say that a community of interest necessarily compels members to stand together; that is human nature, and I make no harsh criticism. The Committee on Rules assigned two days on a former occasion for the consideration of public-building bills. About sixty-five bills were considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that the Committee on Rules assigned those days. That was done in the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well; I stand corrected. By unanimous consent?

Mr. BAILEY. I think they suspended the rules.

Mr. HENDERSON. It was done under suspension of the rules.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Texas is correct. The 65 bills were considered and reported to the House. They came into the House at a time that enabled those of us who were opposed to this kind of legislation to defeat them. To-day they reappear under very different circumstances. They are here by order of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BARTLETT and Mr. BENNETT. And of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. And I have good reason to believe—

Mr. MERCER. And the House.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). I have very good reason to believe that if there is not time enough this afternoon additional time will be given by the Committee on Rules. Again, we have had the decision of the Chair, and perhaps a correct one, that we are not entitled to the reading of the bills. Repeatedly we have been unable to get votes enough to call for the yeas and nays. A quorum is obviously present, and, so far as I am concerned, during the remainder of the day, being powerless under the rules to stop the passage of the bills, I will vote against them. Let me say, in conclusion, that a number of the bills are worthy, possibly most of them.

My contention is not so much against any particular bill, but the reason why I sought to oppose them, why I have resorted to all the rules I could to delay their passage, is because, in my opinion, the condition of the Treasury absolutely forbids this action. If we had a surplus I might not pursue this course. I believe in public buildings; that it is a wise expenditure of money where the public service requires such buildings.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman have the kindness to state how many men on his side of the House voted for the yeas and nays a few minutes ago?

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not see the necessity of the gentleman from Minnesota rubbing it in. [Laughter.] I looked around and saw a limited number.

Mr. TALBERT. Did the gentleman from Minnesota vote for the yeas and nays himself?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I did not.

Mr. DOCKERY. I wish to say, however, that all the support for the yeas and nays that has come to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] and myself came from this side of the House.

Mr. GAINES. Does the gentleman from Missouri know which of these bills ought to pass and which ought not?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I do not.

Mr. BENNETT. All of them ought to pass.

Mr. GAINES. But the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] says that some ought to pass and some ought not. I do not propose to vote for any bill that ought not to pass; and I am here to so act, if I can get the facts.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALT LAKE CITY.

Mr. MERCER. I call up Senate bill 1896.

The bill (S. 1896) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Salt Lake City, the capital of the State of Utah, was read by its title.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read, as follows:

In lines 10 and 11 of section 1, strike out the words "such site shall contain at least 100,000 square feet of ground."
In line 2, page 2, strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read "$300,000."

Line 4, page 2, strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read "two or more of the newspapers," etc.

After the words "Treasury Department," in line 17, strike out all that follows to the end of the bill, and insert the following:

"Providing that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public or private sale, after due advertisement, the building and land known as the Industrial Christian Home, in the city of Salt Lake, State of Utah, and to deposit the proceeds of the sale after the payment of the usual incidental expenses in the United States Treasury as miscellaneous receipts derived from the sale of Government property.

"SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the provisions just read seem to be unusual in their character. I would like to have the report read in my time.

Mr. MERCER. I might give an explanation; and if that is not satisfactory to the gentleman, he can have the report read.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well. I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of an explanation.

Mr. MERCER. In the city of Salt Lake the blocks contain an exceptionally large number of square feet; they have larger blocks or squares there than any other city of the United States.

The first amendment read, by prescribing that the site shall contain at least 100,000 square feet of ground, appears to limit the location of this building to some particular square. The committee received advices from Salt Lake City asking that this provision be struck out; and that has been done in the first amendment. The amendment last read provides for the sale of certain Government property located in Salt Lake City between the city proper and Fort Douglas. This Government property is the subject of a bill which was considered in a committee of this House and reported favorably by mistake, providing for the donation of that property to the State of Utah. Our committee thought that if the Government had no further use for the property, it might be well to sell it and cover the proceeds into the Treasury of the United States. That explains the amendment last read.

Mr. PAYNE. This is property, as I understand it, that the Government has no further use for.

Mr. MERCER. That is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the committee investigate with a view to determining whether the location of this property is a suitable site for the post-office?

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman refers to the Government property?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. MERCER. We did, and it was found to be absolutely unsuitable. It is away beyond the limits of the city.

Mr. STEELE. Is this a part of the military reservation?

Mr. MERCER. No; it is not. It was purchased originally for a home for wards of the Government. It is between the military reservation and the city proper.

I ask a vote upon the bill and amendments.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (S. 146) to provide for a public building at Indianapolis, Ind., and I ask the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on the amendments recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STEELE. Before the vote is taken upon the amendments, I would like to ask a question for information, as to why this reduction was made in the amount appropriated in the Senate bill, from the sum of $1,500,000 to $1,200,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The proposed amendment, I will state to my colleague, is recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is not an amendment of my own volition. But I had to bow to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Of course, I understand that. But what reasons did the committee give for making the reduction?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know of any special reasons—

Mr. STEELE (continuing). Because the bill ought to have been passed at the full amount.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is my own impression, but the committee thought otherwise.

The question being taken, the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I now call up for present consideration the bill (S. 346) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. The amendments recommended by the Committee will be read.

The amendments were read at length.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman how much this bill appropriates?

Mr. MERCER. The bill authorizes the expenditure of $300,000. It appropriates nothing.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there any public building there now?

Mr. MERCER. There is no public building there, and this is a question, I may say, of great importance to those people, and one that is well worthy of consideration here.

There are three magnificent cities—Seattle, Spokane, and Tacoma—in Washington, and this being the largest of the three, we concluded that it was the proper point for the location of the public building. There is no public building in the State.

Mr. STEELE. I think my friend is mistaken in that. There is a public building at Port Townsend.

Mr. MERCER. My friend from Indiana is correct. I had overlooked it for the present. There is a custom-house and post-office building at Port Townsend. I have been in the building myself.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to ask if it is the purpose to open up debate upon this bill. The gentleman seems to have changed his policy of demanding the previous question, as he has done heretofore.

Mr. MERCER. I overlooked that, Mr. Speaker. I thought I had asked the previous question. If not, I demand now the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CANTON, OHIO.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I now ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 75) for the erection of an addition to the United States public building at Canton, Ohio; on which I ask the previous question.

The bill is reported without amendments.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Mr. MERCER. I call up the bill (H. R. 11530) authorizing the extension of the post-office building at Springfield, Mass.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Is this to provide for the erection of a new building?

Mr. MERCER. This is an addition.

Mr. PAYNE. How much is appropriated?

Mr. MERCER. Twenty thousand dollars authorized. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT HASTINGS AND NORFOLK, NEBR.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 83) to provide for the purchase of sites for public buildings in the cities of Hastings and Norfolk, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill and the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were read.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska if there is any objection to having the report read in this case?

Mr. MERCER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that United States courts are held in those cities, and this provides for the purchase of a site at a cost not exceeding $10,000 in each city.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there to be a building in each city?

Mr. MERCER. Yes; United States courts were authorized at the same time to be held there, and this is a Senate bill.

Mr. PAYNE. A sort of an omnibus bill.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments, to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9077) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a new custom-house in the city of New York, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. DALZELL. I trust the gentleman from Nebraska will give some explanation of this bill.

Mr. MERCER. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a substitute has been recommended by the Committee of the Whole, and I suppose that substitute will have to be read under the circumstances. It is in the nature of an amendment, but it strikes out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. PAYNE. I sympathize with my friend's desire to get on, but I think the reading of the substitute would vary the proceedings, and as there is quite an amount involved, of course the gentleman would not object to the reading of the substitute, if he could.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for customs purposes, the premises heretofore selected by the Secretary of the Treasury under the act of September 14, 1888, as a site for a custom-house building, and known as the Bowling Green site, in the city of New York and State of New York, and the sum of $750,000, in addition to the balance in the Treasury remaining unexpended under the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 14, 1888, entitled 'An act for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse in the city of New York, and for other purposes,' is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available for such purpose."

Sec. 2. That upon the acquisition of said site the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be erected thereon a substantial, commodious, and fireproof building for the purposes of a custom-house, at a cost not to exceed $3,000,000, exclusive of the cost of the site, and for the preparation of the plans and the commencement of the work the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available for this purpose; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to contract for the completion of said building, including heating and ventilating apparatus, fireproof vaults, elevators, and approaches complete within the limit of cost prescribed by law, subject to the appropriations which may hereafter be made by Congress.

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, invite not less than five architects to compete for the preparation and furnishing of plans, drawings, and specifications, and the local supervision of the construction of said new custom-house building, under the direction and general supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sec. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public or private sale, to the highest bidder, after due advertisement, but for not less than $3,000,000, the present custom-house property in the city of New York, bounded by Wall, William, and Hanover streets, and Exchange place, and to deposit the proceeds of the sale, after the payment of the usual incidental expenses, in the United States Treasury as miscellaneous receipts derived from the sale of Government property; and in case of such sale the Secretary of the Treasury shall lease said premises from the purchaser or purchasers thereof, at a rental which shall not exceed 4 per cent per annum on the purchase price, for use as a custom-house until the new custom-house shall be ready for occupancy, upon such terms as he may deem advantageous, and such sale shall be subject to such right of lease; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to accept the said purchase price in several payments, from time to time, as he may deem most advantageous: Provided, however, That the use, occupation, and possession of said property shall not be surrendered until the new custom-house is ready for occupation and final payment is fully made.

Sec. 5. That the appropriation of $750,000, made in section 1 of this act, in addition to the balance in the Treasury remaining unexpended under the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 14, 1888, for the acquisition of the Bowling Green site, and the further sum of $1,000,000 for the preparation of plans and the commencement of the work of construction, appropriated in section 2 of this act, shall be reimbursed out of the proceeds of the sale of the present custom-house property, provided for in section 4 of this act, when such proceeds have been covered into the Treasury.

Sec. 6. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOW, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. LOW. Now, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. While the New York custom-house bill was before the Committee of the Whole a fortnight ago, the procedure of the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG] was obnoxious to my privilege and offensive to my constituents.

To trespass upon a Congressman's prerogative, particularly if it should menace his relationship with his constituents, certainly challenges his attention, excites his jealousy, and provokes his criticism. And it is due to myself, Mr. Speaker, likewise to my constituents, as well as to the members on the floor of this House, to define my relationship or connection with the New York custom-house bill.

In the early part of the Fifty-fourth Congress I introduced a custom-house bill for the city of New York, which was afterwards known as the Low bill, or Bowling Green site. My colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], also introduced a bill, afterwards known as the Quigg bill, or the old site for the new custom-house. On account of the conflicting interests generated by the two measures, both bills died with the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LOW. I object to being interrupted.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I should like to ask the Chair, as a point of order, whether he thinks that a question of privilege is being presented?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. LOW. My question of privilege is that the procedure of the gentleman a fortnight ago to-day was obnoxious to my privileges and rights as a member of this House, and I propose to point out the objectionable feature if the House will bear with me a few moments.

On account of the opposition that was brought about by the two measures, both bills died with Congress. In the meantime public sentiment in New York became aroused and the majority of that public sentiment was in favor of my bill, which I reintroduced in the early part of the Fifty-fifth Congress. When the gentleman from New York found that the public opinion was trending my way he came to me and said "I ought to have that bill."

Mr. QUIGG. I shall have—

Mr. LOW. There were two words flashed into my mind at that time; they were adamant cheek—

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to ask a ruling on the question of order that I have raised. The gentleman is talking about events in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and I raise the point of order that it is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see how any question of privilege is raised at this time.

Mr. LOW. I was leading up to it, and was about referring to the gentleman's procedure two weeks ago. I have here an article published in the New York Tribune the morning after my bill passed the Committee of the Whole. I will read part of it.

The New York custom house bill, passed by the Committee of the Whole—Remarks and comments by Mr. QUIGG.

It goes on to say what Mr. QUIGG said, and winds up with a statement referring to Mr. QUIGG.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that paper was taken up and read by many of my constituents, who no doubt thought I had been derelict in my duty, and that some other Congressman was looking after their interests; and many, no doubt, read that article who might have thought and wondered why it was.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it fair, after he has had his bill passed, to consume the time of the House so that other bills may not become law?

Mr. LOW. Well, I will not proceed except by unanimous consent. I want about three minutes more.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will not criticize his leader.

Mr. LOW. I have no leader. The gentleman in his supposition makes a mistake. I ask unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Print it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. MERCER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill S. 88 was passed, and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. LOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. QUIGG. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. LOW. Of course you would; you would not dare to read them.

Mr. MERCER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, and that that motion be laid on the table. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. MERCER. That refers to the Senate bill 88, that passed before the New York bill, the gentleman from New York having made the motion to reconsider on that bill.

PUBLIC LIBRARY BUILDING AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. MERCER. Now, Mr. Speaker, under the rule I am in a quandary as to the bill H. R. 11712, which is the Washington Public Library bill—whether it comes under the order adopted yesterday. It now comes in the order in which it was considered in Committee of the Whole; and the Committee on Public Buildings this morning passed a resolution that these bills should be taken up in their order as recommended by the committee. If this bill is to be considered as coming within the rule adopted by the Committee on Rules, it should be considered now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HENDERSON). The bill does not belong to either of the three classes named in the rule.

Mr. MERCER. Well, then, I ask unanimous consent to call up this bill (H. R. 11712), for it is in order at this place.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MACON, GA.

Mr. MERCER. I now ask to take up the bill (H. R. 10753) to provide for enlarging and improving the United States Government building at Macon, Ga., and to appropriate $25,000 therefor.

The title to the bill and the amendment were read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title to the bill will be amended to conform with the amendment.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8626) to punish the impersonation of weighmaster in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. KENNEY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7371) amending the act entitled "An act to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes," approved May 18, 1896, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BURNOWS, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. CHILTON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Vice-President had appointed Mr. PLATT of New York, Mr. WILSON, Mr. WELLINGTON, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. HEITFELD as said committee.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, Senate bill 146 to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind., has just come from the Senate with the information that the Senate has disagreed to the amendments of the House and asked for a conference. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may now be taken up, so that it may be sent to conference.

There was no objection.

Mr. MERCER. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HENDERSON) announced the appointment of Mr. MERCER, Mr. HICKS, and Mr. BANKHEAD as conferees on the part of the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, GA.

Mr. MERCER. I now call up House bill 1079.

The bill (H. R. 1079) to enlarge and improve the United States public building at Columbus, Ga., was read by its title.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NEW IBERIA, LA.

Mr. MERCER. I call up House bill 11314.

The bill (H. R. 11314) to provide for a public building at New Iberia, La., was read by its title.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were read.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask to have the report read in my time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Did the gentleman in charge of this bill demand the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He had not demanded the previous question.

Mr. PAYNE. If the Clerk will send me the report, I will read it myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska had not yielded the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. He had not taken the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He had been recognized and called up the bill.

Mr. MERCER. I ask for the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. You will have to have a quorum to get that.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 72, noes 6.

Mr. HICKS (before the result of the vote was announced). I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] be allowed to have the report read in his time.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to be allowed to take the floor. I had already taken it and demanded the reading of the report. Objection being made by some gentleman to the report being read from the desk, I asked to read it myself in my own time. And then the gentleman from Nebraska rose to demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the announcement of the vote, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKS] asks consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] be allowed to read the report in his own time.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that I be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Several MEMBERS. How long?

Mr. PAYNE. For twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from New York twenty minutes in opposition to the bill? The Chair hears none. Under the circumstances the Chair will not announce the vote on ordering the previous question, assuming that the demand is waived.

Mr. LACEY. I understand that the vote should be announced. This is a mere request for unanimous consent pending the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thought the demand for the previous question was withdrawn when the request was made for unanimous consent. On ordering the previous question the ayes are 72, the noes 6. The previous question is ordered; and the gentleman from New York is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the report be read from the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11314) providing for the erection of a public building at New Iberia, La., have had the same under consideration and make the following report:

New Iberia is a city of about 10,000 inhabitants. It is the county seat of Iberia Parish. It has more than tripled its population since the census of 1890, and has rapidly grown both in wealth and population. Extensive saw-mills, sugar factories, and other manufacturing interests are situated there, a great part of which have just been completed.

The recent construction of a large sugar refinery in the immediate suburbs of the town, with an enormous capacity, in addition to one previously in existence, and 15 other sugar factories within a radius of 10 miles, all of which, without exception, have largely increased their capacity within the last six months, have brought to that town, and are now bringing, continual large additions to the population.

New Iberia is the center of the Teche Valley, wherein is raised nearly one-third of the entire sugar output of the State of Louisiana. The post-office at that place has been kept in different rented buildings, having been moved from year to year, and most of the time in insecure frame buildings, which has greatly prevented the transaction of mail matters involving the deposit of money. Within the last ten months the building occupied as the post-office burned down, and it has been moved twice since that time.

New Iberia is on the main line of the Southern Pacific Railroad, which has recently established it as the shipping point for the large territory lying between it and the head of the Teche, freight being carried there by regular lines of steamboats, which will of necessity largely increase the business at that point. A branch railroad runs from New Iberia into the interior, taking to that town the salt from the large salt deposits along the Gulf coast. A new railroad is projected to run from that point to the Gulf, and plans have just been completed to establish another large sugar factory there. A canal projected lately, to extend from New Iberia to the Gulf, is now being surveyed, and soon work will begin. This canal is to be navigable at all seasons of the year, and will place the large oyster beds lining the Gulf coast a distance of 10 miles to New Iberia.

It is calculated that oyster and dry shrimp factories will be established at that point, which will double, perhaps, both the population and business of that town.

New Iberia is the distributing point for nine other post-offices.

The necessity for the construction of this building is plain.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of this bill with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "alleys" in line 9, page 2, and substitute a period for the colon immediately following the said word "alleys."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I know, in the present temper of the House, that it is a very ungrateful task, as it is a disagreeable duty, to say a word to impede the passage of the twenty-odd bills which are to follow this and those we have just acted upon. I know that every gentleman interested in one or the other of these bills stands ready to vote even for a bill of the character of that presented now in order to get at his own bill, which he regards as most important. I know that pressure was brought to bear, probably even upon the committee, to put some of these bills in the front in order to secure the support of the members who favor other meritorious bills, and so get them through the House.

This bill now under consideration seems, by some means or other, to have gotten into the front rank. It is set forth, not upon its own merits, but is upheld and sustained by the merits of the other bills which will follow in its wake.

Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of bills in that way.

That is not the proper method of legislation in the House of Representatives. It does not need a word from me or from anyone else to convince every member on the floor of that fact. We ought to take these bills up and consider them absolutely upon their own merits. There is no other way in which we can perform our duties to the people of the United States.

I have not objected to a single bill which has been presented from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a first-class post-office or a custom-house, or even where courts are held; but here is a small village, a place, even according to the report of the committee, without material importance, where no courts are held; a small post-office, where the receipts are insignificant, and a place practically unknown, except as we see the name on the maps and in the geographies of that region.

There is no need of this building there. It is a large expenditure of public money, without, in my judgment, any justification. There is no court of the United States and no custom-house there, and only a very few inhabitants, and the post-office receipts are so insignificant that the advocates of the bill do not even put them in the report.

At this point, we are told, a railroad branch is to be constructed at some time in the future, and there is also a possibility that in the sweet by and by there may be a canal. But for the present there is nothing of the kind. And yet it gets into the front rank, and is forced upon the House for its action and consideration. It is not only a bill of that kind, but, Mr. Speaker, it is not even a solitary exception. We have had bills of the same character—one for Carrollton, Ky.; one for Bluefields, W. Va., and bills for other places which have the same importance in public affairs.

Now, if gentlemen will consent to let each one of these bills stand upon its own merits, and take its own chances, of course there could be no possible objection. If gentlemen would really vote their convictions, and where a bill of this sort comes up for passage would vote it down, and not attempt to rush it through with the whip and spur of the previous question, and support it only because of the fact that they have bills behind for which they wish to secure strength and support, there would not, possibly, be so much ground for complaint. If gentlemen would do this—if they would let each bill as it comes before this body rest exclusively upon its own merits—no one could object. I should not raise my voice in opposition to the consideration of any of the bills in that event. But the House will not do that. We are met now with a very different condition.

Why, what are the facts? Last week a bill of this character was considered. In the Committee of the Whole, when the question was taken on its passage, there were 85 votes in the affirmative and 15 in the negative, and we all know that that bill had little merit, if any. Why should we not consider these bills then regularly? Why should we not have the reports read without objection, and then let each member in view of the facts presented in support of the bill, vote his own conviction? If the bill is right, if members think that it should pass, of course they will vote in support of it. But here is a bill making an appropriation of $50,000, when every man knows that the Government never rented a post-office building there in the past that cost $5,000 for construction. If we should adopt that rule, we could succeed in removing very much of the scandal which is apt to attach to the passage of bills of this character.

If there are meritorious bills for the erection of public buildings where there is a public demand for them and where the public necessities require them why should we not provide for them without being compelled to add to the list bills of this character? I have not objected to a single meritorious bill, and I do not propose to do so. I only ask that we may have the privilege of voting separately on each of these bills, so that each member can express his individual sentiment by his vote. If we could get rid of some of the bills on the Calendar that ought not to have been there, bills that ought not to have been reported from the committee at all, and are only presented and forced to the front because they will be thus enabled, by reason of the merit of other measures, to have a possibility of favorable action of the House, there would be no objection, I imagine, in the mind of any man to these proceedings. But I do not believe in attaching a bill of this kind to other measures simply to give it an opportunity of passing the House.

Mr. MERCER. I will state to the gentleman from New York that the bill under discussion was fathered by a member of the committee—the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I have no doubt of that! I supposed, of course, that that was likely, or it could not have otherwise got here.

Mr. BERRY. I would like to state to the gentleman—

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Kentucky, if he wishes to be heard.

Mr. BERRY. I only wanted to say, Mr. Speaker, that it seems a little strange—for I have followed the proceedings of the gentleman from New York—that when three separate bills were proposed, considered, and passed for New York we heard not a single word or objection from him. Now, however, there is great objection because of the introduction of the pending bill. Of course, I know New York is the center of population—a metropolitan center—a wealthy city, and there can be no possible objection to the erection of public buildings, whenever they are necessary, in the metropolis of the country.

Mr. SIMPSON. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that the gentleman from New York was acting upon his convictions in regard to New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BERRY. I am only seeking the passage of such bills as I think are reasonable, considering the character of the places in which they are located. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, the city of New York contributes an amount of taxes which justifies the expenditures made there.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] and to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] that those bills in New York were passed for places where there were first-class post-offices and receipts of over $40,000, and where there were other buildings of a first-class character, buildings of such character as the United States builds in those different places. As I said in my remarks, I am not opposed to this thing. I am not opposed to giving bills even to second-class post-offices on this list. What I object to is going down and hunting up some fourth-class post-office in somebody's district and trying to crowd it through the House, because there are better bills and good bills following along after that gentlemen desire to have put through.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield for a question.

Mr. McDOWELL. Have not you heard members of the committee say that they did not expect some of these bills to go through the House that were reported?

Mr. PAYNE. I never heard that, and I never had any expectation of that kind. I should like to see it realized on this bill.

Mr. McDOWELL. Members have told me that they never expected to see some of those bills go through.

Mr. HICKS. They had no right to use that language. These bills have all been carefully scrutinized by the committee and they are all meritorious bills.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, on a division (demanded by Mr. BARRETT) there were—ayes 96, noes 13.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were—ayes 92, noes 20.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused; 13 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand therefor.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused; 17 members, not a sufficient number, voting therefor.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I make the point that that is too late.

Mr. BAILEY. It is too late to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. I guess not.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest that the point of no quorum comes too late. The demand for the yeas and nays waived the point of no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. I can make the point at any stage of the proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HENDERSON). The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Speaker of the House, in the Fifty-first Congress ruled the other way—

Mr. BAILEY. I say the gentleman was too late.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point that no quorum is present, not that no quorum has voted.

Mr. DOCKERY. You can not make that point now.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us clearly understand this. If the Chair holds that any member of the House can make the point at any time that no quorum is present, then let the Chair so decide, and we desire to know it; but our point is that the point of no quorum comes too late to be made on the vote that was just taken. If it can be entertained at all, it must be entertained upon the ground that any member of the House can make the suggestion at any time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned, the Speaker of the House in the Fifty-first Congress held, and Speakers since that time have all held, that after the demand for tellers and tellers being refused, and after the yeas and nays being demanded and the yeas and nays refused, it is too late then to make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Tennessee is right about it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not think any Speaker has ever held to the contrary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is overruled. The yeas are 92, the noes 20, and accordingly the bill is passed.

Mr. MERCER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and also moves to lay that motion on the table. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, that the motion to reconsider lie on the table.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 11.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present on that vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House do now adjourn. If we can not transact business, we should adjourn. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] We may just as well have a quorum on all other business as on this.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will not ask for a division, Mr. Speaker, but I will renew my motion later. If we are to have the point of no quorum raised on all these bills, we may as well have it on all other business.

The motion to adjourn was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). One hundred and eighty gentlemen are present—a quorum. The yeas have it, and the motion that the motion to reconsider lie on the table is agreed to.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman has yielded to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time?

Mr. POWERS. Two minutes. I wish to call up a bill. Mr. Speaker, I ask—

Mr. DOCKERY. What is this? There is nothing pending.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 5522, and pending that I ask the House to give me its ear for just one moment. This is a first-class post-office. The net revenue receipts are larger than any other office in the United States. The revenues of the office for one year will pay all the expense that is asked the Government to build a new public building on ground that the Government now owns; and this bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I ask unanimous consent to put it upon its passage. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BLUEFIELD, W. VA.

The next business laid before the House was the bill (H. R. 5974) to provide for the selection of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Bluefield, in the State of West Virginia.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARRETT. To a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARRETT. Is it in order at this time to demand the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. It has been so held this morning.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill can be read.

Mr. HICKS and Mr. POWERS. I object.

Mr. POWERS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Vermont demands the reading of the report. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to raise the point of order whether the gentleman has the right to demand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question was not demanded, and the gentleman asked it in his own time when he got the floor. The Chair supposes that he has the right to ask that it be read in his time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] has the floor unless he yields to the gentleman from Vermont.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska did not take nor demand it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Nebraska has the floor, and if he is going to yield to this kind of dilatory motions—

Mr. MERCER. I yielded to the gentleman from Vermont two minutes, and his two minutes are exhausted. The reason why I have not proceeded further is because a dozen gentlemen have been around me at my desk, and I could not obtain the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is thoroughly satisfactory.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for the gentleman from Nebraska to be criticised and lectured because he failed to take the floor?

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. POWERS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POWERS. I called for the reading of the report, and the Chair directed the Clerk to read it. Now, I submit that it is too late to raise any objection on that score.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, there are many of us who have no knowledge of this bill, and having been refused the reading of the bill, we would like to have sufficient order so that we may hear the report read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of the gentleman from Massachusetts is well taken. The House will be in order.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is one point of order now being disposed of. What is the gentleman's question of privilege?

Mr. LOUD. I am afraid the House is going to have trouble, and I will call up the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that the special order would exclude this conference report. I do not understand that the special order excepted appropriation bills or the bill which the gentleman has in charge. If that is so, I do not think he can supersede the special order with this report.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is too old a parliamentarian not to know that a conference report is always in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that notwithstanding the fact that the special rule does not make exception of conference reports, still it has been held that they are in order, and the point of order is overruled. The gentleman from California is recognized.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11683) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 16, 23, and 24.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 22, 25, 26, and 27, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: On page 8, after the word "registry," in lines 2 and 3 of the bill, insert the following: "assistant superintendent of registry;" and on page 9, after the word "registry," in lines 2 and 3, insert the following: "assistant superintendent of registry," and after the word "order," in line 3, insert the following: "assistant superintendent of money orders;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster-General may allow railway postal clerks whose duties require them to work six days or more per week, fifty two weeks per year, an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay; and the sum of $31,000 is hereby appropriated for this purpose;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment, and after the word "dollars," at the end of the amended paragraph, insert the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster-General may in his discretion allow post-office inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on duty away from home or their designated domicile for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and may make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 19 and 20 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

E. F. LOUD,

GEO. W. SMITH,

Managers on the part of the House.

M. S. QUAY,

W. B. ALLISON,

R. F. PETTIGREW,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, has the statement been read?

The SPEAKER. It has not been. The Clerk will read the statement of the House conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11683) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on each of the Senate amendments, namely:

The Senate made 27 amendments to the bill, involving a net increase of $402,738.55.

By the action of the conferees, submitted in the accompanying conference report, the House recedes from amendments involving an increase of $306,500. The Senate also receded on one amendment involving an increase of $51,000.

The conferees disagreed upon amendments involving an increase of $196,238.55.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendments numbered 1 to 10, inclusive, is to add to the paragraph for compensation to clerks in post-offices, 2 clerks in the $900 class, 21 clerks in the $700 class, 10 clerks in the $800 class, 30 clerks in the $600 class, and 3 clerks in the $1,000 class, increasing the amount of the appropriation for clerk hire $62,000; with the following amendments: Lines 2 and 3, page 8, after the word "registry," add "assistant superintendent of registry;" lines 2 and 3, page 9, after the word "registry," add "assistant superintendent of registry," and after the word "order," add "assistant superintendent of money order."

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendments numbered 11 and 12 is to leave the law stand as at present respecting clerk hire for separating mails at third and fourth class offices, and to provide substitutes for post-office clerks while on vacation.

Amendment numbered 13 corrects the total amount of money appropriated for clerk hire to correspond with the foregoing amendments.

Amendment numbered 14 is to retain the word "experimental," which is the present law relating to rural free-delivery service.

Amendment numbered 15: Strikes out the words "rating and other" and inserts the word "rating," which leaves the present law stand relating to this subject.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment numbered 16 is to retain the present law in regard to letting of star-route contracts, which provides that such service shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment numbered 17 is to increase the amount of the appropriation for railway post-office clerks $32,500.

Amendment numbered 18: Strikes out all of the proviso inserted by the Senate, and inserts a provision authorizing the Postmaster-General to allow railway postal clerks, under certain conditions, an annual vacation of fifteen days with pay, and appropriating therefor the sum of $31,000.

Amendment numbered 21: The effect of the action of the conferees on amendment numbered 21 is to strike out the words "employed away from home" and insert the following: "Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow post-office inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on duty away from home or their designated domicile for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and may make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem."

Amendments numbered 22 and 23: The House recedes on amendment numbered 22, and the Senate recedes on amendment numbered 23, so that the language of the provision will correspond with the language of a similar provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill relating to the employment of persons in the Government service.

Amendment numbered 24: The Senate recedes from its amendment which requires the joint postal commission to make report to Congress not later than March 1, 1900.

Amendment numbered 25 allows an additional sum of $7,000 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the joint postal commission, and is agreed to by the House conferees.

Amendment numbered 26 extends the franking privilege, as now regulated by law, to the Hawaiian Islands; and is agreed to by the House conferees.

Amendment numbered 27: The House recedes, and agrees to the Senate amendment permitting the superintendent of money-order system to draw money orders without additional fee in order to correct errors by postmasters; and to allow the Postmaster-General to prescribe the forms for the issue of money orders.

On amendments numbered 19 and 20 your conferees are unable to agree.

E. F. LOUD,

GEO. W. SMITH,

Conferees on the part of the House.

FEBRUARY 28, 1899.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report; and upon that I desire to make one suggestion.

Let me, as a preliminary, say one word personal to myself. A great deal of dissatisfaction and bad temper was displayed when this conference report was presented. I desire to say to the House that the enrolling committees are pressing for these appropriation bills. They must be enrolled before this Congress dies. I had held this conference report all the afternoon. Some gentlemen suggested, "Yes, you have held it until certain bills got through." I wish to say I have myself no bill among these public building bills, and I have no preference for one bill above another, except that some bills have equity in their favor and some have not. If the House wants to pass these public building bills I can not stop it. If I could I would. But, Mr. Speaker, knowing that I can not stop the passage of these bills, I shall simply pursue my duty as a member of this Congress and ask that this conference report be adopted as soon as convenient for the House.

Now, I am willing that a vote be had upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted was laid on the table.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, there is one item upon which the conferees could not agree, the item in regard to special mail facilities on railroad lines. In view of the pronounced vote of the House on this subject, the conferees were unable to surrender the matter in conference, and have therefore brought it back to the House in the shape of a disagreement.

I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who, I understand, desires to move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and concur therein. I yield for that purpose only.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments Nos. 19 and 20, and agree to the same. And now, with the consent of the chairman of our committee, I wish to say just one word.

Mr. LOUD. I yield to the gentleman—how much time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just one minute. I do not care to take up time, because I am anxious to dispose of this question so that we may go on with the special order. I wish merely to say that the sooner we get through with the report on the Post-Office bill, the sooner we shall get back to the special order.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I have a few minutes' time?

Mr. LOUD. There are some members of the Post-Office Committee who desire to be heard. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, when this question was before the House for discussion on a previous day, I thought it my duty to oppose the granting of this special subsidy to the railroad companies for the transportation of the mails, without any feeling of enmity to railroads who are the beneficiaries. After due consideration of the question on that occasion, this House saw proper to strike out the item granting $196,000 additional compensation for the carrying of the mails. Immediately there was brought to bear, as had in some measure hitherto been done, pressure from various parts of the country on Representatives on this floor to recede from that position.

I believe it is proper that every Representative should reflect upon this floor as far as possible the views of his constituency, and give due regard even to the views of a very small portion of his constituency. The chamber of commerce of the city in which I live disagreed with the position which I took on this question, and requested by resolution that the Representatives from Tennessee, including myself, should support and not resist the passage of this item. That resolution was not sent to me, though it appeared in the public press. There was much criticism of the vote upon that question. I believe it proper that I should announce to this House, as I agreed with the chamber of commerce to do, their opposition to striking out this item in the bill.

In reply to their resolution I thought proper to express in a letter to them those views which I entertain on the question, and in consideration of the eminent respectability and intelligence of gentlemen who represent the interests of that chamber, and the supposed commercial interests of that particular section, I now state to the House that they opposed the position I have taken as their Representative on this floor. In justice, however, to myself, and in view of the fact that that chamber did not see proper to give the same publicity to the views which I entertained that they gave to the criticism of the vote I cast on the question, I send to the Clerk to be read, as a part of my remarks, a letter which I communicated to that chamber, which they declined, for reasons best known to themselves, to lay before the public. I ask the Clerk to read the letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 2, 1899.

GENTLEMEN: I have seen in the public press, but not otherwise, a copy of the resolution adopted by your body some time since, requesting Senators and Representatives from Tennessee to favor the restoration of the subsidy item of $196,000 stricken by the House from the Post-Office and Post-Roads appropriation bill. As your immediate Representative, it is always gratifying to be able to comply with any request you may make and to do anything I can to advance the interest of each and every one of our people and the commercial and business interests of our whole country. But in this instance I shall not be able to comply with the suggestions of your resolutions, and I know that you would not desire it if you understood the facts as I am certain they exist.

I favor the fast mails as one of the best means of promoting our business interests, and as a member of the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee of the House will do all that I can that is right and lawful to retain these facilities. In deference to your views, with which I differ in the matter of the subsidy, I shall submit your resolution to the House for its fair consideration on the return of the bill from the Senate, and if that body shall deem it wise, restore the disputed item to the bill.

I never have and never shall vote for any subsidy to any individual, company, or corporation under any circumstances, as I regard the exercise of legislative power in this way as unlawful and as the most successful method of producing and hiding corruption in legislation. I think that when a contract to perform any service is made between the Government and individuals or corporations, that the Government should pay the amount of the contract price, which should always be full and adequate compensation, and that if full and adequate compensation is paid that the contract should be performed; and to demand and receive additional compensation by way of subsidy under such circumstances is morally and legally wrong. Therefore, under the facts as they exist in the matter of subsidies to railroad companies for carrying the mails, I could not on general principles vote for a subsidy item, and particularly the item in the bill mentioned, for the following reasons:

First. Because the fast mails we now have between the South and the East were not put on as the result of the subsidy, but by ordinary contract with the Government, and paid for out of the general appropriation for that purpose, the compensation being nearly four times as much as it costs the railroad companies to transport the mails; and these mails are not held on as the result of the subsidy, but under the contract. These facts are substantiated by the testimony before the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee and by the official statements of Mr. White, the Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, who says that the mail has not been facilitated by the subsidy and that there have been no material changes in the schedule since the subsidy was granted; and they are further and most emphatically attested by the statement, on January 19, 1899, of Second Assistant Postmaster-General Shallenberger, in response to an inquiry from a member of the House during the time the vote was taken on the subsidy item, that "the subsidy was not needed to retain fast mails South and East." These gentlemen are the Government officers in charge of this branch of the service, and theirs is the only direct proof obtainable on the subject.

Second. The Postmaster-General is vested with full power on the subject and does not ask for a subsidy, and only pays it out because he regards the act of Congress in voting it as mandatory.

Third. The contract now in force, regardless of the subsidy, as a matter of fact and of law, requires the rapid transit of the mails.

Fourth. Because the payment of this subsidy is an unprofitable, unlawful, and dishonest appropriation or gift of $196,000 of the people's money. Legislation to appropriate public money for private uses is nearly always obtained under the pretext that such legislation is necessary to promote the business and commercial interests of the country and is a public necessity; and, unfortunately, in many instances the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, business leagues, and other commercial bodies, actuated by a desire to promote the public interest and not being possessed of full and complete knowledge of the facts, have given much aid to such legislation by influence exercised over their Representatives through petitions in advocacy thereof.

Of course, I understand that the resolution was proposed for political purposes, under the pretense of serving the public, though I would not assume that it was passed for that purpose.

Without impugning the motives of any who deem it wise to support this subsidy, or any other subsidy in or out of Congress, I have felt it proper, in response to your resolution, to give to you, my neighbors and friends, the reasons why I can not concur in its suggestions.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. MOON.

The CHATTANOOGA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I regret the necessity which made the reading of that letter to the House a duty on my part, but it expresses, as I believe, the views of the vast majority of the constituency that I have the honor to represent, and my own reasons for opposing the subsidy. I regret that I can not gratify, as far as my vote is concerned, even a small fraction of the people of my State who are interested in this particular question. But I believe that the interests of all are better subserved by adhering to the policy which I have briefly outlined heretofore of not placing the Government under the necessity of paying out their money to accomplish a purpose which is better served without it.

Our people, some of them, are laboring under a misapprehension, as I think and as I might have stated further in that communication. Gentlemen will observe, as a matter of fact, that the particular section of the country to which I refer obtains no special benefit, if any benefit is conferred at all upon any part of the country, from the grant of the subsidy. The train—No. 35—which carries the alleged fast mail from New York City south is one of the most profitable trains, as I am informed, which is run over the lines of the Southern Railroad Company. It stops at all of the larger cities on the road and pays better, as far as passenger traffic is concerned, than any other train they run.

The schedule time of the train was not fixed by the road, nor was the train run under that schedule, for the sole purpose of carrying the Government mails and accommodating the Government in that respect. This fast mail train does not come within less than 150 miles of my district (the connection being at Salisbury, N. C., and Atlanta, Ga.); and, as a matter of fact, because of the distance mentioned, we could have little or no possible interest in it if the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee hearings are creditable.

But, Mr. Speaker, I will not further discuss the local interests involved. I desire to return for a few brief moments to the greater interest—the question of public interest—which we must take into consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time allotted to the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MOON. I would like to be permitted to proceed for about five minutes longer.

Mr. LOUD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, there are other questions involved in this controversy in which the public at large have an interest. I know it has been said that the Representatives on the line of this railway have been demanding the grant of this subsidy for political reasons, and for these reasons have been forced to support it. But I do not desire to reflect upon any Representative or make any such charge, and therefore dissent from the suggestion which is involved in that statement. I know it is said that the power of this corporation in legislative matters is so great that Members and Senators do not dare to resist it. I would not assume, sir, the truth of any such suggestion as that. I know it has been said, also, that this is a question of the country against the cities. I would not allege anything of the kind.

Although it may as well be observed in this connection that when the cities—many of them—are obtaining their mail from four to six times a day by special delivery, fully four-fifths of the people of the country, who have to earn their subsistence at 75 cents a day and who pay the bulk of the taxes to support the Government, are getting their mail not more frequently than once a day and often but twice or three times a week. But some may think that this is not a legitimate argument and bears no reference to the question under discussion; but I hope never to forget the interests and burdens of the common people, out of whose treasury this effort to subsidize the railroads is made.

The proposition here is, Does the Government of the United States derive any advantage in the transportation of mail matter for the sum which is involved in this subsidy; and does the Government of the United States now, by the present general arrangement, pay enough to this railway company for the transportation of its mail matter?

Is there a contract between the Government and the railway company for mail transportation? If there is, must the railway company be required to live to it, or shall the Government recede from its contract and pay compensation extra and above its terms? If so, the sum so paid in addition would be a gratuity or subsidy, a gift to the railroad for which no consideration would come to the people.

The hearings before the Post-Office Committee developed the fact that these identical railway companies are to-day receiving more than $1,000,000 from the Government of the United States for carrying mails. It receives for the transportation of those mails a sum four times as great as it costs to carry them. Does not the Government then fulfill the full measure of its obligation to the railroad, legally and morally, in complying with its contract? If this is true, why add the $196,000 by way of gift or donation to the railway company?

It is said, however, that the fast mail, this extra train, makes necessary this extra compensation. I deny it as a matter of law. I deny it as a matter of fact, on the testimony of the Post-Office Department. The Postmaster-General tells us that he does not want this subsidy, that it is not necessary, that no additional facilities come from it; but when Congress, in view of the statement that he has made in his written report to this body, comes back and says, "Mr. Postmaster-General, it may be true that you do not need this money, but we vote it nevertheless," it is an indirect dictation to the Postmaster-General to expend it for the purpose of a subsidy, and he regards it as mandatory and expends it. Thus, $196,000 of the people's money goes to this corporation without one iota of benefit or advantage to the country at large, or substantial benefit to the country through which these mails pass, which could not as a matter of law and fact be obtained under the general appropriation.

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. BRUCKER. I understand that the gentleman is a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I would like to ask him this question, whether or not the general Post-Office appropriation bill reported by his committee is not made up largely upon the estimates and recommendations of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. MOON. Nearly altogether.

Mr. BRUCKER. Now, was this particular item or subsidy recommended by the Post Office Department or by any official of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. MOON. The Post-Office Department does not recommend it.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to ask this further question. Did the committee request the Postmaster-General or any subordinate of that Department to appear before the committee and give the committee any information on this subject?

Mr. MOON. It has been done hitherto, but I believe not at the present session.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when a contract is made between the Government and an individual for the carrying of the mail, even if nothing more were done than to say that the Government agrees to pay so much for the transportation of mail, the law comes in and supplies that contract, being a part of it, that the mail shall be transported in view of present conditions and facilities for carrying the mail. It must be carried with reasonable haste and expedition.

This Government does not pay a million dollars to this railroad company to carry mails upon a freight train. It requires, and the law requires as a part of the contract, though the terms of the contract be simply to carry the mail for a certain length of time for a certain sum, that it be carried reasonably fast. That is all we want; that is all we are entitled to; that is all we ask; that is all we get from the railroad company to-day. I believe it is a great wrong and injustice to the people to pay this $196,000. I believe that the granting of subsidies under any and all conditions is wrong. By what right do we abandon the contract and give away the people's money? Why should we cease to represent the people and become the agents of corporations? Let us be just enough to pay that which we ought to pay legally and morally, and no more. Do not add to the contract by way of gift to the corporation when it is already receiving four times as much as it ought to receive for the transaction of this business. This measure is in contravention to public interest and the principles of economic government. I therefore oppose it. [Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS].

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask whether some arrangement could not be made so as to determine when a vote shall be taken on this question?

Mr. LOUD. I said privately, and now I will say publicly, that if the gentleman will keep his seat we will come to a conclusion much earlier.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, will you agree to it in half an hour?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] has the floor, and the House will please be in order.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, the people throughout the section of the country in which I reside have become so accustomed to these special mail facilities since they were inaugurated in 1893 that they were smitten with great alarm when it was telegraphed through the Associated Press that this House had refused to vote to continue appropriations for that fast mail service. The result has been that I, together, perhaps, with all members from that section, have been overwhelmed with applications from our people urging that we should stand by this appropriation.

It is singular, Mr. Speaker, how the language which has been used by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in regard to this question has been construed to mean, as has been stated within the past few minutes by my distinguished friend from the Chattanooga district, that this special-facility fund has not improved the mail service; that it was just as good and just as fast in all particulars prior to 1893 as it has been since, and that if the special-facility fund should be discontinued he would still be able to provide just as fast mail service as we have to-day.

Now, I deny that any such words have ever fallen from the lips of that distinguished officer. I am myself a member of the postal commission and participated in his examination with respect to this subject; and I here say and affirm, and am prepared to prove by reading his exact words, that what he said was that there had been a most marked and astonishing increase of mail facilities between New England, New York, and Pennsylvania and the South and West since the special-facility fund was provided. He never has dared to affirm, and will not affirm, that we had as good service and as quick service before we had the special-facility fund as is provided now.

He admits that he might not be able to get as good a service as we have, but thinks that he could get what he is pleased to say is "substantially as good service." It is not true that there was any service at all to be compared to the present prior to 1893, when this special-facility fund was first provided. At that time there was not one fast through train from New England, New York, and Pennsylvania to the South; not one single train that connected with others as the trains do that exist to-day. It may be true, taken literally, as Captain White, Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service says, that this service existed prior to the awarding of the contract, and not by virtue of the special provision.

The statement is disingenuous; it is unfair. In March, 1893, an appropriation was made, so that this fund could be used by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in his discretion in providing faster through-mail facilities. The contract was not awarded until October, 1893. In the meantime the Southern Railway Company, for the purpose of showing that it was entitled to it, and as a bidder in the market for it, put on these two fast trains, which have been maintained from that day to this. Not only that, but the Department fixes the schedules, and the company runs its trains at the behest and under the command of the Post-Office Department. So that it is disingenuous and unfair to make the statement that this service had been established prior to awarding the contract, and that the contract had not been the cause of the establishment of the service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster-General testified before the Postal Commission that prior to this arrangement there was no really through fast service from the New England States, New York, and Pennsylvania to the South; that there were as many as ten roads affected in the result, each one running upon its own independent schedule, with no connection with each other, no connection with intermediate roads, no sort of facilities for expediting through mails or expediting the mails that would go over the branch roads leading to many other points, whereas now you have this great Southern road that has put two splendid fast trains on, and you control the movements of these trains and require them to make such schedules as the Department may prescribe; you have established connections with all the branch roads south of Washington, and the result is that you give fast mails not only to Atlanta and New Orleans, but to Tampa and Jacksonville, making a rapid transit for all of the Eastern mails, and by a train going out from Atlanta by way of Birmingham to Memphis and so on to Kansas City and other Western cities. All this results from this small appropriation which we have made, and which is attempted to be denounced in connection with this bill as a subsidy.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a subsidy in any just sense of the word, nor in the sense in which subsidies are described in the contemptuous language which politicians use. A subsidy in that sense means something for nothing. By means of this special facility fund we are making the service as good as it is anywhere in the United States. The Southern railroads are maintaining these two fast trains, and have put on a third train to supply the demand for local service. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General has never said that he could get as good service without it. On the contrary, he said that if it should be withdrawn it might prove disastrous to the service, and his opposition, in fact, is to the general principle involved, which might justify the claim that if there is to be a special fund for one road there should be to another.

Here is another thing that has resulted from this special fund according to the testimony of General Shallenberger himself. Not only has it expedited the mails on these trains, but it has compelled the seaboard lines and other lines paralleling it to expedite their own service, and run on faster schedules for the purpose of competing for passenger traffic. You have got a better schedule on the Seaboard Air Line, and every other road that runs from the North to the South, by reason of the fact that this special facility fund has been given to the Southern roads.

Why should not the people of the South be entitled to this small beneficence at the hands of the Government? It is no novel thing; for many years such funds were devoted to trains going through the West; for a great many years such funds were voted to expedite mails throughout the Western country, but as the large cities grew up, as commerce developed, rival roads became natural competitors with each other, and they no longer required a special facility fund.

It was unnecessary to single out a road to give it fast time, because the roads all competed with each other, and each was as prepared as the other to take the mails and expedite them. It is not so in our section of the country. Unfortunately we have not the dense population, we have not the great cities and great communities, and our commerce is necessarily limited. I hope we are on the uphill road and that the day will come, and be not far distant, when we can dispense with the special-facility fund, as the people of the North have been able to do.

Mr. Speaker, I can not understand why there should be any opposition to it. Is there any impropriety in it? If not, is it not the duty of the Government to take its money and expend it for the benefit of the people of the United States? It is not a subsidy; it is paying for actual value received at the hands of the railroad company, and I do hope that this House will vote to concur in the Senate amendment. We have got the service, and no man can tell what will be the result if you withdraw this aid. I will not take the time to read what General Shallenberger has said, but I assert that he is not prepared to affirm, and has not affirmed, that we could have the present service without this special-facility fund.

He thinks he could get it, but why should we take the chance and threaten the great commercial industries of the South and the far West? This service extends its influence into Texas. The Southern road makes close connection at New Orleans with others which take up the mails, and speed on their way to the great imperial State of Texas. The impulse of the service goes out through Kansas and that section of the country. I do not wish you to understand it is local in any sense. Here is a bundle of resolutions passed by all the commercial bodies in the South, and here are letters and telegrams and newspaper editorials all pleading for a continuance of the service, and I do hope and beg my colleagues to stand by the amendment. Let us concur and let our people retain the splendid service which the generosity of the Government has afforded them since 1893.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I know how anxious the House is to proceed with the business of public buildings, but I consider that this matter is of equal importance to this House and to this country, with the question of appropriating money for the building of any public structure. Now, this is an old story; we have gone over time and time again this fast mail subsidy, and I say for one that if I felt for one moment that the withdrawal of this allowance to these various railroads would result in the destruction of the fast mail service to the Southern States, I would vote for it as cheerfully as any gentleman that has advocated it; but I am entirely satisfied that the same service would be performed, the same facilities would be rendered for the transportation of the mail in the South and the Southeast without this subsidy that there is to-day with it.

When we hear of chambers of commerce and other commercial bodies in the South passing resolutions and requesting the reinstatement of that item of the bill, it would give us the impression that these gentlemen had the idea that we were absolutely going to cut off all mail facilities from the South and Southeast by the withdrawal of this subsidy. Nothing of the kind. These mail trains will run on the same schedule time as now, will carry the same mail they now do, and will receive the same rate of pay as other railroads all over the United States. Now, I have here a statement which I wish to call to the attention of the House, to show that these railroads are paid, not in any niggardly way, but in a munificent way, independent of these subsidies.

In that connection I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are but two of these subsidies granted in the United States. One is for the line of railroad starting, practically, at New York City and ending in New Orleans, and the other at Kansas City and ending in Newton, Kans.; one carries $170,000 and the other about $25,000. All these great railroad systems starting out of New York City and going westward across the States of New York, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Illinois, and distributing to the great West, get no subsidies. All the other railroad systems of the country, in whatever direction they send their trains, get no subsidies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have here a table which I will print in full in the RECORD, but some of the figures of which I shall now bring to the attention of the House. This vast subsidized line to the South is practically made up of four different routes connecting with each other. The Pennsylvania Railroad, which carries the mail from New York City to Washington, gets as its ordinary pay for transportation $563,121.67, and for its railway postal cars $91,435.50. The Southern Railway, carrying the mails from Washington to Atlanta, gets $532,794.52 for ordinary transportation, and for its postal cars $111,618. The Atlanta and West Point and Western Railway of Alabama, carrying the mail from Atlanta to West Point, gets for its ordinary transportation $70,376.87, and for its postal cars $17,183. The Louisville and Nashville Railroad, carrying the mail from Montgomery to New Orleans, gets $114,570.41 for ordinary transportation, and for its post-office cars $31,827.

Mr. Speaker, these four lines receive for ordinary transportation of the mails $1,270,873.47, and for their post-office cars $252,063.50. In other words, independently of this subsidy they receive, as their total transportation for carrying the mails a total distance of 1,365 miles, $1,522,936.97—ample compensation and equal to that paid to any other railroad system in the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the very object for which this subsidy was originally granted has ceased. It was originally granted to expedite the delivery of the mails from New England and New York to the West Indies by way of Tampa, Fla. It no longer expedites that service, the transportation having been switched around to carry the mails from New York City through the Eastern and Southern States to New Orleans.

Whatever reason there may have been, therefore, for establishing a rapid-transit service to the West India Islands, to assist in building up our commerce with that portion of our hemisphere, no longer exists. The purposes of this subsidy having failed, it seems to me there is no longer any good reason for continuing it.

Call it what you please, it is a subsidy outright from the Government over and above what the railroad companies would receive according to the law which applies to other railroad systems. It is a free donation, made every year by Congress, upon the request and importunity of gentlemen from the States through which this system runs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the millions of dollars we are expending for all purposes—with the millions we are expending to-day for the construction of public buildings scattered all over the United States, many of them in the States represented by the gentlemen who are appealing to you again for this charity—it does seem to me that here is a place where we can exercise judicious economy and at the same time bring this postal service back to a legitimate basis.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the House is so impatient for its other work, I shall not occupy longer time, but will ask leave to print in the RECORD a table which I have prepared for future reference.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the table referred to by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL]? The Chair hears none.

The table is as follows:

Mr. LOUD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLARDY].

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I have tried by questions to elicit information upon this subject; but I have heard no statement from the gentlemen who favor this subsidy which seems to me to justify this expense. The only advantage that they claim as resulting from this large expenditure of public money is that under this system the mails reach certain places in the South earlier than they otherwise would. Now, suppose that is true. I say if it is true, it does not show that this system benefits the communities in question to the extent of a single cent.

All the business in any given section of the country is regulated by the time the mails come in. If this subsidy were withdrawn, these communities would have just as many mails as they now have. Those mails might come in a little later, but the business of the community would soon adjust itself to the particular hour for the arrival of the mails, and nobody would be the loser in his business to the extent of a single cent. As all the business people of the community would get their mail at the same time, no one could have any advantage over another. And it does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, unwise to pay these corporations the large sum of money which is involved here simply for the purpose, as we are told, of facilitating the mails, when the contract with the Government requires the mail to be carried with reasonable dispatch and on their fastest trains.

Now, if any real benefit is to accrue, I should not stand in the way. But if there is no benefit, why should we spend the people's money in this way? Why give certain railroads this large subsidy to do that for which they already receive ample pay? No one has claimed that the Government does not pay enough. No one has claimed in the course of this discussion that the roads do not receive ample pay for all the service they render. If there is a gentleman who will stand upon this floor and say that the railroads do not get a fair compensation for the service they render the Government, that, of course, might be some excuse for the enactment of a provision like that which is suggested in this bill. But as a matter of fact they are receiving all that their contracts call for. What justification, then, do we find for giving them this additional bonus in the way of compensation for such service? No sufficient reason has been given, and I shall therefore vote against this measure.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. GREENE]. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Oh, no; you won't vote yet. Just wait a little while now. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I believe—and yet I may be a little behind the times and somewhat antiquated in my views—but I am impressed with the idea, and have been since and before I became a member of Congress, that the public servants of the people, who were elected for that purpose, ought to handle the money of the people with just the same care as we would handle our own. I do not believe that there is a gentleman on the floor of the House, if this were a private transaction, who would favor the payment of this subsidy.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I would.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. If there is one, Mr. Speaker, he is peculiarly constituted.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Well, I am just that man.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. And I seriously doubt, Mr. Speaker, that there is more than one at all events. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that he would do it. But I think he must be an exception in this body. However, he at all times frankly says he favors monopoly and combination.

I listened particularly to the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi in the House a few moments ago, and he stated that since the subsidy had been refused by the House to the Southern Railroad Company he had been submerged, overwhelmed, and burdened with petitions from all over the State, and resolutions from certain parties in the district in which he resides, urging the vital importance to his constituents of this subsidy. I doubt if there is a gentleman on the floor who is not familiar, however, with the methods of the railway companies and other corporations to get the necessary resolutions and petitions in cases of this kind. It is a very easy thing for them to do so. I think we have all had experience in matters of that kind, that when a railroad company wants certain resolutions or petitions it is the easiest matter in the world to get them. They send out copies of these petitions, which are signed by the people through the solicitation of their agents.

A MEMBER. Why?

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Why! Simply because the railroad company wants them. Why, you can go out in the gentleman's own district, I venture to assert, and get a petition to hang almost any man in the district, if you prepare the petitions in advance and pass them around for signatures. [Laughter.] People will sign matters of that kind almost without looking at them.

So, then, I claim that the petitions and resolutions to which the gentleman refers mean nothing whatever. They are inaugurated by the companies themselves, and solely and selfishly for their own benefit. They come from the men who want a subsidy granted to them. And that is all there is about the petitions and resolutions that have "submerged" and overwhelmed the gentleman from Mississippi to demand of Congress the giving away of this large sum of money.

Now, there is another suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi to which I wish to refer and which I think is misleading. He says that the railways have increased their speed and accommodations since 1890, when the subsidy was first granted. That is undoubtedly true. Is there, I would ask you, a single line of railway anywhere in the United States which has not increased its facilities since 1890, whether the subsidy was paid to it or not? They have been compelled to do it because of other considerations. Why, you might just as well compare the speed of Noah's ark with a fast modern steamship, and then attribute the increase of speed of the steamship to some subsidy that somebody gave after Noah had given up the business. [Laughter.]

That is all nonsense. There is nothing in it. All railroads have increased their speed and shortened their time. The railroads out through the Western States that at one time received a subsidy are making better time since the subsidy was taken away from them than they ever made before and rendering better service, as good as any roads in the world.

Now, I would not pretend to say that the increased speed and better accommodations now offered are due to the fact that the subsidy was taken from them. I would not argue that; and yet I might just as well argue that taking the subsidy away from the Western roads has increased their speed since 1890 as for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] to argue that giving the subsidy has improved the speed of Southern roads since 1890. One is just as plausible as the other; but I would not make such an argument as that, because it is not true. There is nothing in it.

Now, the railways out West have increased their speed because of better tracks, better cars, better locomotives, and the necessity for increasing their speed to compete with other lines of railroad that operate in competition with them. Now, the Southern Railway doubtless is making better time than it made in 1890, and it would be a great pity if it did not. It would be rather disgraceful to say of the Southern Railroad that in the last nine years, with all the improvements in machinery, and the increase in the speed of other railroads in the country, that the Southern Railway had remained at a standstill, and would have remained at a standstill but for the little steal it has been getting out of the United States Government. Now, I do not believe such a thing as that, do you?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I think the railway has increased its speed, because it had to increase its speed, because of the increased facilities and improved machinery, and because the demands of modern civilization required that it should increase its speed.

Now, the gentleman says that the Postmaster-General has never said that we could have as good time and as good mail facilities without it as we could with it. Well, he has said that in his judgment we could.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Are not the roads bucking against each other in point of speed in friendly competition for mail contracts?

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Why, gentlemen, we have them bucking against each other all over the country in the matter of speed, and does not that naturally increase their time and improve their facilities? Is not that the thing that has increased the facilities and speed of all the railroads in the United States since 1890? To argue that this subsidy does it is the merest nonsense. I do not believe there is a gentleman on the floor who, in his sober, candid, honest, sincere moments, believes that it has.

Now, I want to ask any gentleman on this floor who has been contending all along that he was opposed to subsidizing corporations, I want to ask any gentleman how he can reconcile his conduct with his conscience when he stands up and votes for what he knows is an absolute gift to a corporation when it is being paid four times what it costs to perform the service which it renders to the Government? Now, how can he do that? I believe in being consistent. I am no more in favor of a steal in my State than I am in favor of a steal in the State of Kentucky or anywhere else, and I am opposed to this because I believe it is wrong. Gentlemen are voting for this vicious measure simply because it goes to their State. The railway is getting all it is entitled to and what it contracted to receive for the services which it is performing, and, as I have said, it is getting four times what the services rendered are worth to the Government. Now, why should we put our hands into the people's pockets, not into our own specially, but into the pockets of the people, to pull out $175,000 and give it to the Southern Railway Company?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has seven minutes.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] does not desire to consume any more time, and if not, I will move the previous question after making one suggestion. I want to suggest that personally I have opposed this subsidy because I believe it to be a gift of money without return, but I do not believe, and I say it in perfect candor to the House, that the Senate will recede upon this amendment.

There is a sentiment prevailing, whether it be right or not, that this measure should await, along with some others, until the Postal Commission has reported. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. BROMWELL. A parliamentary inquiry. The motion being that we recede and concur, a vote for the subsidy would be "yea" and a vote against the subsidy would be "nay." Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. Substantially correct. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the motion to recede and concur; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BROMWELL and Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Division, Mr. Speaker!

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 116, noes 52.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-eight gentlemen have risen—a sufficient number—and the yeas and nays are—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The other side.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and fifteen in the negative and 38 in the affirmative—a sufficient number—and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 85, answered "present" 7, not voting 114; as follows:

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how I am recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. BARRETT. I desire to vote "nay."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called, and listening, and failed to hear it?

Mr. BARRETT. I was present during the entire roll call and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. That does not bring the gentleman within the rule.

Mr. BARRETT. I did not hear what the Chair said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that does not bring the gentleman from Massachusetts within the rule.

Mr. BARRETT. In what respect is "the gentleman from Massachusetts" delinquent?

The SPEAKER. The rule requires the gentleman to vote during the roll call, and the Chair is not allowed to ask permission for him to vote at any other time except upon the supposition that his name failed to be called.

Mr. BARRETT. I was sitting on the floor of the House the whole time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman was listening, and his name was not called—

Mr. BARRETT. I was listening on the first roll call up to the time the Clerk got down to G or H; then I concluded that I should not hear my name called and therefore waited for another opportunity.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman answer the question of the Chair?

Mr. BARRETT. What is the Chair's question?

The SPEAKER. It is whether the gentleman was listening when his name should have been called, and failed to hear it?

Mr. BARRETT. I was listening when my name should have been called, and did not hear it called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will now be called.

The name of Mr. BARRETT was called, and he voted "nay."

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. VEHSLEGE, but I voted "nay." The gentleman is not present, and I do not know how he would vote, and I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted "nay." I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. SNOVER.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the negative, but being paired with the gentleman from Washington, Mr. JONES, upon this proposition, and he is necessarily called from the House this afternoon, I withdraw that vote. Mr. JONES would vote in the affirmative if here. I answer "present."

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER]. I am informed if he were present he would vote "aye." I voted "no," and I wish to withdraw my vote.

Mr. LITTAUER. I am present, Mr. Speaker, and I voted "aye;" the pair is a mistake.

Mr. SKINNER. Then I vote "no."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I voted, but I find I am paired, and I withdraw my vote.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. GROUT with Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. WEAVER with Mr. MARSHALL.

On this vote:

Mr. GILLET of Massachusetts with Mr. LEWIS of Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington with Mr. KITCHIN.

Mr. McCALL with Mr. BREWER.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. LOUD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PROPERTY OF THE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT TRANSFERRED TO THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State inclosing an inventory of the property of the Hawaiian Government transferred to the United States under the act of Congress approved July 7, 1898, providing for the annexing of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

Washington, February 23, 1899.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following change of reference: On Senate bill 3187, for the relief of the widow and heirs of Samuel Kramer—from the Committee on Pensions to the Committee on Claims.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 438) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth V. Litzenberg and amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be complied with, the House reconsidering its action upon the Senate amendment, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BLUEFIELD, W. VA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized. Mr. POWERS. I believe, Mr. Speaker, there was a report being read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. DORR), as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5974) for the erection of a public building at Bluefield, W. Va., and appropriating money therefor, have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

Bluefield is a city that has sprung up in a few years and become the most important in the point of commercial activity in southern West Virginia. It is situated at the junction of the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley division of the Norfolk and Western Railway.

There were weighed, handled, and billed at Bluefield during the month of December, 1897, an average of 25,000 tons of coal and coke per day. In addition to this a large amount of cattle, lumber, and other through and local freight has to be handled at Bluefield, requiring the employment of a large number of men and necessitating a yard with 35 miles of track within the corporate limits of the city.

Bluefield has several large wholesale houses, banks, iron works, lumbering plants, flouring mills, two daily and three weekly papers, besides a large number of retail stores of all kinds.

The city has a handsome brick city hall, street lights, telephone system, and an ample water supply.

One State institution for colored people is located here. This institution was established by the State as a normal school for the colored people of the State and is kept up by the State.

The population of the city in 1896 was 7,230. The estimated population for 1898 was about 8,000.

The following data, showing the post-office receipts, show how remarkable the growth has been:

1897	$50.20
1898	4,192.80
1897	9,916.16

In ten years 20,558 per cent advance.

The present post-office building, which is rented by the Government is totally inadequate for the service.

A lot on which to erect the building can now, we are reliably informed, be obtained at a very reasonable sum, and in view of the rapid growth of the place, its commercial importance, and the inadequacy of the present rented quarters, we think the best interests of the Government will be subserved by the erection of a public building at Bluefield.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "elevators" whenever it appears in the bill.

In line 12, page 1, strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-five."

Strike out a" after the word "expenses," in line 11, page 3, and up to and including the word "therein," in line 19, page 3.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I had supposed when the title to this bill was announced to be a provision for the erection of a public building at Bluefield, that it referred to Nicaragua, but I learn from the reading of the report that it is in West Virginia. I yield such portion of my time as he desires to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. If there seemed to be any desire on the part of the House to expedite the business of these bills and to limit debate upon them, I should probably not consume any time in the discussion of the case of Bluefield. But as the Committee on Public Buildings seem to have invited and sought candid discussion on these various matters, I shall undertake, by the courtesy of the gentleman from Vermont, to take up some few moments in the discussion of the merits of the bill now before the House.

But before doing so I wish to say a few words of a general nature in connection with this scheme of public-building improvement, and say that there would not have been so much debate, even on this bill, as is likely to occur if gentlemen like the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] had been allowed, when they desired, a fair opportunity for discussion and to present their views to the House, and to state the facts which the House is entitled to have in its possession.

I have been urged by several gentlemen on this side of the House, who discovered that I intended to make some remarks about Bluefield, not to interrupt this bill on the ground that Massachusetts has received the passage of three bills to-day; also that this Bluefield bill is so very bad that the body situated at the other end of the Capitol could be safely depended on to give it its quietus.

I wish to say in regard to Massachusetts that we have received to-day three appropriations, which are as follows: One of $100,000 for the city of Fitchburg, a very large, thriving, and growing city, with a population of more than 30,000 people and enormous business interests, to which a very large population is tributary to the city of Lawrence, $100,000, it being a city of more than 52,000 inhabitants, with a business contributed to by a large and wealthy surrounding territory. The third is an appropriation for $20,000 for repairs to a public building at Springfield, a city of more than 40,000 people and one of the wealthiest and most progressive cities in the country.

Now, if all the bills brought into the House had been of that character, I undertake to say that no person on this floor would have seriously objected to their passage; but when a bill of the nature of the one under consideration is seriously brought in here it is time for some one to give the facts and let the House understand what kind of a scheme this is now under consideration.

Although I have never had the advantage of visiting Bluefield, W. Va., I call it a town, because up in our country a place of such population and circumstances would never be dignified by any other name. In fact, it would be impossible under the statutes of Massachusetts for a place of that kind even to be heard in the legislature on the subject of being made a city. In view of its small population and importance, it would not be entitled to that distinction.

But in some way or other this place gets in here with a favorable report—with a recommendation that a post-office building costing $45,000 be erected there. The population of the place is said to be 9,000 at the present time. The report gives it something less than that, but I am willing to concede, in the absence of personal knowledge, that it has the 9,000 claimed.

I find that at this post-office, for which it is proposed that the Government erect a handsome brick building, the gross receipts last year were $9,000. Let me say, as showing that I am not possessed of any invidious feeling in this matter, that in the district which I represent on this floor there are six different towns and cities having a larger population than Bluefield and having larger gross receipts at their post-offices—one of them a city of 45,000 people, one a city of 38,000 people, and the others, as I have said, larger than this place—which have never received, and except in one instance have never dared to ask for, a public building.

And taking the ground assumed by one gentleman on the other side early in this session, that all he asked for was a fair chance, that his district should be fairly treated in this distribution, I certainly should have reason to demand that a district so well and advantageously situated for this demand as my own should be given as much consideration as this district in West Virginia.

But I do not put the matter on that ground, Mr. Speaker.

To come back to Bluefield, I find that at that town the post-office force, according to statistics, consists of one postmaster and one clerk, and that at present the postal service of the Government is conducted in quarters for which an annual rental of $421 is paid. I also find that in that town there is not even a free-delivery system; and I suspect that in none of the other bills now pending before the House, unless it be one that will shortly come up in regard to the town of Carrollton, Ky.—I suspect that in none of these other bills is there such a case as we have here illustrated in Bluefield, W. Va.

I can not find, from a hasty inspection of the map published by the Post-Office Department so recently as 1898, that there is any considerable amount of mail handled there. Nor can I find by reference to this map that there is any railroad junction there. It is, however, stated in the report that this town is "situated at the junction of the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley Division of the Norfolk and Western Railway."

Now, for fear I may inadvertently make some mistake in alluding to this town of Bluefield, W. Va., I will, if it be agreeable, ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds whether or not the statement in the report is correct, that this town is "situated at the junction of the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley Division of the Norfolk and Western Railroad?"

Mr. MERCER. I am informed by the gentleman from West

Virginia [Mr. DORR] who introduced this bill that that is a true statement.

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman from West Virginia is within the sound of my voice, and in order that I may not make any misstatement I should like to ask him whether it is true that Bluefield is "situated at the junction of the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley Division of the Norfolk and Western Railroad?"

Mr. DORR. That is the fact.

Mr. BARRETT. At the junction of the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley Railroad—with what?

Mr. DORR. At the junction of the main line of the Norfolk and Western Railroad with a branch line—the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley Division.

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman informs me—and I am very glad to be correctly informed on the matter—that there is a junction of the main line of the Norfolk and Western Railroad with a branch line known as the Pocahontas, Radford and Clinch Valley Division. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Let me ask, is not that junction simply a stub or spur of the main line running out from that town?

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman from Nebraska is so much better informed than myself as to the great—

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I am just informed that such is the fact—that this is simply a stub running out from the main line—not a junction of two roads at all.

Mr. BARRETT. My friend from Nebraska is so much better informed in regard to the great centers of population in this country lying west of the Alleghenies than I can possibly be from my limited knowledge, based upon a residence in New England, that I should naturally accede to any proposition on this subject that he may make.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I just received the information from the gentleman who was talking to you a few moments ago that it was true.

Mr. HANDY. May I interrupt for a question?

Mr. BARRETT. I yield, of course, to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. HANDY. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say some time ago that the population of Bluefield was about 9,000.

Mr. BARRETT. Am I mistaken in that statement?

Mr. HANDY. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think he has been misled by the statement embodied in the report. The report may say that the population is something like 9,000. Of course the census shows nothing at all, because Bluefield has come into existence since 1890. I was told by a commercial traveler the other day, a man of intelligence who has visited Bluefield, that there are not over 5,000 people there.

In this connection, if the gentleman will permit me, there is another interesting thing that ought to be incorporated in this debate. Bluefield never can be a large town, because there is no water supply available and no possibility of giving sufficient water for drinking and other purposes in a town of any considerable size.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Maybe they do not care much for water. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. I hope the gentleman from Delaware will not be interrupted. I ask for orderly proceedings in this matter.

Mr. HANDY. There is another thing, Mr. Speaker, if I may have the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as to the possibility of the future growth of this town. I do not, of course, wish to trespass on the time of the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. BARRETT. I am glad to be informed by the gentleman.

Mr. HANDY. The town of Bluefield is located in a gorge between two mountains, and not only is there no water supply available, but there is no possibility of constructing a city of any size, unless you hang the houses, like bird cages, on the cliffs of the neighboring mountains. It might be possible to have two or three parallel streets through the gorge, but that is the extent to which the city can grow.

Mr. DORR. Where did you get that information?

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I have yielded to the gentleman from Delaware; but during the time I occupy the floor I wish orderly proceedings to prevail, and hope that, so far as possible, members will contribute to that end. I do not yield to the gentleman from West Virginia at this time, but will do so later.

Mr. HANDY. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow a suggestion?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. If the gentleman finds a single moment when the gentleman from West Virginia is willing to give any information about the town of Bluefield, I would suggest to him that he seize the opportunity and yield to him for that purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. What is the name, "Bluefield" or "Stubblefield?" [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I again ask that the orderly procedure of the House be enforced. I have yielded to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY]. After he concludes I will occupy a few moments myself.

Mr. HANDY. I have some information, Mr. Speaker, which, by the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will impart to the House in reference to Bluefield. When the gentleman from West Virginia questioned my authority for a statement, and wanted the source of my information, I thought it the best moment, and so suggested to the gentleman from Massachusetts, to allow the gentleman from West Virginia to give information to the House.

When this bill was before the Committee of the Whole a short time ago, I gave a review of the situation—

Mr. DORR (interrupting). And did not tell the truth.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I insist that the gentleman from West Virginia shall be in order. I have not yet yielded to him.

Mr. DORR (continuing). Bluefield has more business than the whole State of Delaware, and more wealth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia is out of order and will take his seat.

Mr. HANDY. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can go on for a moment—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware is recognized by consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, in his time.

Mr. HANDY. The remark of the gentleman from West Virginia that I had not told the truth in dealing with this question was, in the first instance, offensive to me, but when he went on and stated that the little town of Bluefield, W. Va., has more population and more wealth than the whole State of Delaware, I realized that he is a man whose opinion as to the truth of any question was a matter of little consequence and could not possibly give offense at all, no matter how expressed.

My information, I will say, came through a gentleman—a citizen of Richmond, Va.—well known there, who is a commercial traveler, and as such has visited Bluefield frequently.

Mr. VINCENT. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask what evidence he had that Bluefield wanted any water to drink at all? [Laughter.]

Mr. HANDY. Well, they may want water for other purposes, perhaps, than drinking.

My information was, as I was going on to state, first, as to the size of the town; second, as to its business; and third, as to the possibility of its future growth, which lead me to believe that there is no need of a public building there.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, while I have welcomed the information tendered to me by the gentleman from Delaware, and will gladly correct myself in one detail, I am bound to say that according to my information he is wrong in another matter. I did incorrectly state the population of this town at 9,000.

That was due to the fact that in hastily jotting down some memoranda for use this afternoon I mistook the memorandum of the gross receipts in dollars of the post-office for the number of the population. I should have said that the gross receipts last year were $9,000, and it is stated in the committee's report that the population of the city in 1896 was 7,280 and in 1898 about 8,000.

Now, as I do not understand that any general census has been taken of that town, either in 1896 or 1898, I am bound to confess that until my friend from West Virginia [Mr. DORR] shall further enlighten me, I am not entirely sure that these figures are absolutely correct, but of the fact that the gross receipts last year were only $9,000 I suppose there can be no reasonable doubt.

Coming to another matter, in the arraignment by my friend from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] of this town, situated in the very southernmost part of West Virginia, I wish to assure him that he has done it an unintentional and grave injustice. I do not imagine that he, from his standpoint, regards a water supply as absolutely essential. [Laughter.] In fact I have been given to understand that water in Delaware is somewhat at a discount.

From my brief service on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in this body I have been led to believe that in the various rivers and bays of Delaware they have everything that nature desires except water.

But I find in this report of the committee, made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DORR], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—and if I am not mistaken Mr. DORR is the gentleman who represents the district in Congress in which Bluefield is situated—I find the following statement, that among the other attractions of this town are "its handsome brick city hall, street lights, a telephone system, and" then, I trust not as an afterthought, "an ample water supply." Of course, I do not know what an ample water supply in that latitude is considered.

Mr. DORR. Waterworks.

Mr. BARRETT. My friend informs me sotto voce that it consists of waterworks. That being the case, and situated in a mountainous region, I should presume that those waterworks included a dam; and knowing something of the hasty and impetuous temper of the people of West Virginia, as illustrated in the various stories that come to our region concerning the social conditions there, I should presume that when the people down there hear of the reflection made by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] upon their town they will present him, with one accord, with the chief feature of their waterworks. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask in good faith why this bill was reported.

I can understand why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have brought in here a large number of bills for the great commercial centers of the country. I can understand why this Government is obliged, as a matter of necessity, to appropriate a million or more of dollars for a great custom-house in New York City.

I can understand why a great many others, if not all, of these first items which we took up this afternoon are a necessity for the carrying on of the public business; but I should like to have some member of the committee tell us frankly and fully what it was that induced the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report this bill and place it in this position, where it stands ahead of other good bills, thereby neutralizing the opposition of members interested in their passage, but which (the Bluefield bill) ought not under any circumstances to be passed by this House. I should be willing to be answered either by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER], or by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DORR], and I yield to the gentleman ten minutes of my time for that purpose.

Mr. DORR. Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen have assailed the city of Bluefield. The city of Bluefield is only about ten years of age, but it is one of the most prosperous cities in the South and ten years ago without any population, but to-day it is one of the thriving cities of the South. There is more coal shipped from the city of Bluefield than from almost any other city in West Virginia, Kentucky, or perhaps Pennsylvania. They have 36 miles of siding tracks in the city of Bluefield. They have not only waterworks, but they have magnificent hotels. They have magnificent stores, banks, and other buildings of like character. It is in the heart of the great Flattop coal country, that was only a few years ago undeveloped.

To-day the ships of the world are using the Pocahontas Flattop coal. You could not have carried on the war with Spain without the coal from the Flattop country. [Laughter and applause.] And to-day, gentlemen, we are shipping coal, not only to the coast, but we are shipping it to the city of Chicago. [Applause.] We are supplying the city of Chicago with coal from that country. We are supplying the great Illinois Steel Company with coal. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, another thing. We have got to have a Federal court in that city. We are 250 miles from the nearest court, and at the last Federal court in the city of Charleston one single case cost our people $10,000 in witness fees and other expenses. [Applause.] I have introduced a bill, and I expect it to be reported, for the establishment of a court there, with the approval of the judges, and it is necessary for us to have a Federal court in that city. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to be heard.

Mr. BARRETT. You can not have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. BARRETT. Does the gentleman from Colorado desire to ask me a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to say a few words. I would like to have about five minutes.

Mr. BARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman if he wants to ask me a question.

Mr. BERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BARRETT. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BERRY. How does the gentleman reconcile what he is saying when in Vineyard Haven, a place of only 2,800, they are asking for an appropriation of $98,000 for the custom-house there, when that place has not one-third of the population that Bluefield has?

Mr. BARRETT. I will answer the gentleman, and I am very glad to have the gentleman ask me that question, before I go on about Bluefield, W. Va.

Mr. BERRY. You had better explain about Vineyard Haven.

Mr. BARRETT. The village of Vineyard Haven is situated on the island of Marthas Vineyard, and has been there a very great many years. The "custom-house" that stands there was erected before I was born, and I presume before my friend from Kentucky was born, and if in appropriating that money any wrong was done to other communities of larger size I shall say, for my part I very much regret it. Now, having yielded to my friend's solicitous inquiry courteously, I will answer his inquiry in another way. His very affecting interrogation in regard to the custom-house at Vineyard Haven can best be answered by saying there is no custom-house there.

Mr. BERRY. It is the post-office building I am talking about.

Mr. BARRETT. There is no post-office building, but there was established a naval hospital—a marine hospital for the succor of distressed and shipwrecked mariners. My friend from Kentucky serves with me on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and knows that is one of the greatest harbors of refuge and is entered by more vessels than any other port of New England, except the port of Boston. This naval hospital was erected there, not with any regard to the local situation, but it was erected simply for the benefit of distressed and shipwrecked mariners, perhaps some of them there on account of the chief product of the State of Kentucky, which sometimes finds its way to New England, for we, in part, by consumption, minister to Kentucky's large, important interest that is so loved and is so abundant there. [Laughter.]

Now, in regard to the statement made by the gentleman who represents the town of Bluefield, I certainly do not want to do any injustice to his feelings.

He made the very suggestive assertion that he intends to have a Federal court established at Bluefield, and he alleges that he wants this building erected in order to be ready for the coming of that Federal court.

Now, Mr. Speaker, he has certainly been very delinquent in this matter, because in this bill which he has caused to be prepared and which he has had reported by the committee he speaks of accommodation for the United States post-office and Government offices in the city of Bluefield, in the State of West Virginia. There are no other Government offices in the city of Bluefield, and he would—

Mr. BERRY. Does not that cover the case?

Mr. BARRETT. I would say that he should have amended his bill in this way: "For the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and all the other Government offices which I intend during my term of office during this Congress to have established in the city of Bluefield, in the State of West Virginia."

Why need we make preparation for a Federal court which does not exist and probably never will exist? That reminds me of a report which I was looking over a little this afternoon in regard to the town of Carrollton, in the State of Kentucky. Now, being unwilling to do anybody an injustice in this matter, I should be glad if the gentleman would indicate to me—

Mr. BERRY. That is my district.

Mr. BARRETT. Oh, that is in the district of my friend on the left! I thank you. Now, this preparation for a Federal court, which my friend from West Virginia proposes to have established at Bluefield, is without any consultation with the other members of the House and with the 90 members of the United States Senate sitting at the other end of the Capitol and with the great statesman who presides over the destinies of this country, the Executive. Why not get them to consent to a court before we build a building to house that court in?

I now come to the town of Carrollton, Ky.

Carrollton also wants a public building. When we come to the Carrollton bill, I shall try to have time to consider it. I shall show what a great and prosperous town it is, not for post-office business, but in producing whisky, etc. The town of Carrollton has a post-office. Its gross income was three thousand one hundred and some odd dollars, and it took to run that post-office last year a postmaster and a single clerk, who received the munificent sum of $200 per year.

The Government, through the thrift and sagacity of some Carrollton real-estate owner, was mulcted for rent and light to the tune of $223. In order to save $223 for rent and light, and in order to give better accommodations for the postmaster at $1,200 a year and this single clerk at $200 a year, the Committee on Public Buildings has reported a bill by which the United States Government proposes to give a $25,000 post-office to Carrollton! That means $1,250 a year rent instead of $223. But what a chance for the postmaster and the clerk!

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend from Massachusetts allow me for a moment? I want to report a bill.

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly; at any time to report a bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts yields to me, and I desire, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, to report the general deficiency bill, and I ask that it be printed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BLUEFIELD, W. VA.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a reservation in the remarks that I made. It might seem to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] I am unkindly attacking a town in a State for whose product of men I have the greatest respect, and for some of whose agricultural products there is a considerable consumption in the State of which I have, in part, the honor to represent on this floor. [Laughter.]

I am told in regard to Carrollton that it had an income last year of $3,100 gross in its post-office, with a postmaster who received a salary of $1,200 a year, and whose one clerk received a salary of $200 a year; and I think I may have left the impression that this town was hardly deserving of receiving a Government post-office building, when there are cities and towns in my district which, compared with Carrollton, in population and in post-office receipts, and in every form of activity except the manufacture of whisky, are not to be mentioned at the same time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Have you introduced any bill here?

Mr. BARRETT. I will say to the gentleman, in the language my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has made classic in this House, that I never cross bridges until I come to them.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me?

Mr. BARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment to defend his State in its manufactured products.

Mr. BERRY. I think the gentleman will have to defend some of the products of Massachusetts before I get through.

Mr. BARRETT. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will not take what I say unkindly. I shall deal with Carrollton later on, if I get the opportunity.

Mr. BERRY. I want to say that while the gentleman's State manufactures the poorest quality of New England rum out of common New Orleans molasses, we manufacture the purest article of whisky and pay more income to the United States Government from the product in the little country of Carrollton, in which Carrollton is situated, than all Massachusetts does outside of Boston. [Laughter and applause.] And yet the gentleman is loaded down upon the river and harbor bill with millions and millions of dollars and he could hardly get enough for every little seaport town on the coast.

Mr. BARRETT. Yes; on whisky. I was waiting for that river and harbor bill fling, and I shall come to it after I get in my observation about Carrollton. I left the impression, I am afraid, from the remarks I made—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They made no impression at all.

Mr. BARRETT (continuing). That I am not in favor of an appropriation for Carrollton.

Now, I will thank my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], for whom I have the greatest respect and whose relations with me have always been most pleasant, that if he has any remarks to make of that sort to make them on the floor and not sit in his seat and indulge in that kind of jibes. I think I can say that whatever may be the merits or demerits of my remarks on any subject here, I have never been lacking in courtesy and consideration and appreciation of all the members on the floor at any time.

Mr. SULZER. You are a paragon. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHATTUC. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. How much of the time of this session has the gentleman been in the House? What proportion of the time, except when he has been on the floor speaking, has he been here? We never hear him except when he runs in and makes a speech, and then he goes back to Boston to attend to his papers. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. I shall have to attend to that question when I get to it, if I have time; and I will then attend to that matter to the entire satisfaction of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHATTUC. I would like to have the gentleman answer the question now.

Mr. BARRETT. I am afraid that I may have left the impression regarding Bluefield, W. Va., that my views were not altogether complimentary—

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to a point of order. So many gentlemen are standing in the aisles that we are not able to hear the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will resume their seats, and the House will come to order.

Mr. BARRETT. I find in the report in regard to this bill—

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he thinks it fair, after having sat in his seat and permitted to be passed without any objection on his part bills aggregating $7,229,000, that now when bills for smaller towns, which aggregate only $1,315,000 are reached, he should use the time of the House in filibustering against them? [Applause.]

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, disclaiming any intention of filibustering, I will say that when the bills for first-class post-offices, for places with custom-houses, for towns and cities where United States courts are held, were under consideration I did not interpose any objection or ask for any opportunity to be heard.

But when in this House the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], in spite of his long years of service here and his greater knowledge of the affairs of this Government than most of us possess or ever will possess, was not allowed to fully discuss a bill which he deemed detrimental to the interests of the Government, when all debate was stifled, and when the yeas and nays were refused, when every expedient was adopted to rush these bills through without consideration, I made up my mind that if the opportunity came and I should find a bill coming here of the nature of this one, I would do everything in my power to prevent it passing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was not the gentleman allowed twenty minutes to discuss that bill?

Mr. BARRETT. He was not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I submit that he was.

Mr. BARRETT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he asked whether I was not allowed that time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. My question is, Was not the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] allowed twenty minutes to discuss that bill?

Mr. HENDERSON. And only used ten.

Mr. BARRETT. Has the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] concluded his question?

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts is talking by unanimous consent?

Mr. BARRETT. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been recognized to speak on the bill before the House.

Mr. MERCER. Was he recognized by the Chair or did the gentleman from Vermont yield to him?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont yielded to him.

Mr. MERCER. When will his time be out?

The SPEAKER. He has fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY] here that in my position as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I have extracted, or sought to extract, from the Treasury of this country millions and millions of dollars for the benefit of the people whom I represent.

I wish to say in answer to that suggestion, which is certainly not based on information, that the river and harbor bill as it passed this House—although I had the honor, I think, to be the third member in rank on the committee—carried in appropriations for the district which I represent only $60,000; and of that $60,000 $55,000 was for the improvement of a river upon which, before the lapse of another year, there will be carried freight which will pay in customs revenues, not now received by the Government, every year more than the entire amount to be expended for this improvement.

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to a point of order. My point is that the gentleman from Massachusetts is not speaking to the bill before the House, which is a bill appropriating money for a post-office building at Bluefield. He is now talking about questions pertaining to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BARRETT. I have finished that. I am going back now to Bluefield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will confine himself to the question before the House.

Mr. BARRETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, my friend from West Virginia representing in this House the town of Bluefield, W. Va., made a statement which I think is rather calculated to mislead the House. As I listened carefully to his remarks, I understood him to say that the town of Bluefield, which is in the famous coal region of West Virginia, shipped more coal than is shipped from any other town in that State and more than is shipped from any town or city in Pennsylvania.

Now, while I am not here as the special champion of Pennsylvania in regard to the amount of coal shipped from any point in that State, yet I am inclined to believe that the gentleman was mistaken in his statement and that the town of Bluefield does not ship and has never shipped anywhere near the amount of coal that is constantly being shipped, not only from one, but from a great many towns and cities in Pennsylvania.

I find by the report upon which this bill is based, but which seems to be very fragmentary in its statements, that in the month of December, 1897—and there is no statement as to the transactions of any other month or of any other year than the month of December, 1897—there was weighed, handled, and billed at Bluefield an average of 25,000 tons of coal each day.

December, Mr. Speaker, is the best time, no doubt, during the whole period of the year in which to make an estimate of that character, because during that month more coal is handled than during any other period in the year. But on the statement of the gentleman we learn that Bluefield is also a railroad junction.

I assume, therefore, that not only has the coal which is produced there or in the immediate neighborhood been included in his estimate for the record month of December, 1897, but also the coal produced on the branch line, which was shipped through the town to other points. I do not think I am making too strong a statement when I claim that 25,000 tons shipped per day for the one month named is not a sufficient justification to entitle the town to the proud distinction of receiving an appropriation of this character for a public building such as is suggested here.

Why, sir, there is a place in my own district—a town—which manufactures more rubber boots and shoes than any other place in the world—

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on rubber boots and shoes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Am I to understand that the gentleman objects to the statement?

Mr. LACEY. My objection is that you are not confining yourself to the bill. You are discussing the rubber-boot production of Massachusetts.

Mr. BARRETT. I can hardly discuss the merits of Bluefield unless by comparison.

Mr. SULZER. And comparisons are always odious. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. I have nothing but the kindest sentiment and feelings toward Mr. SULZER, and accept his interruptions pleasantly, hoping he enjoys making them as much as I do receiving them. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Massachusetts should not address by name another member.

Mr. BARRETT. "The gentleman from Massachusetts" accepts the suggestion of the Speaker, and apologizes to the Chair for his momentary forgetfulness.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from New York accepts the apology. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. I did not offer an apology to the gentleman from New York, but to the Speaker.

Mr. SULZER. But the gentleman from New York is perfectly willing to accept the apology, at all events.

Mr. BARRETT (continuing). But the rubber boot and shoe industry of this town is larger than that of any other place in the country. I was endeavoring to compare the importance of that place with this town of Bluefield. I was comparing the importance of this place—Bluefield—as a commercial center with a town in my own district, where, I repeat, there is throughout the year a larger manufacture of rubber boots and shoes than in any other place in the country; a city which has a population of over 40,000, and pays to the Treasury of the United States from its post-office business every year several times as much as Bluefield ever pays or can hope to pay.

Yet the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with that careful and just consideration which I know they always give to all such matters, have considered the importance of the town, and while reporting bills favorably, such as that now under consideration for Bluefield, did not see fit to place the bill which I introduced for the city to which I am referring on this preferred list which the House is now considering. Therefore, I claim, by comparison as well as absolutely, that this bill ought not to be passed until this town of so much larger importance, and doing more business has been equally favored by the committee.

And now, sir, going back a moment—

Mr. McDOWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment for a question?

Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. McDOWELL. Do you believe that any third-class town without a United States court is entitled to a public building?

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman asks if I think that a third-class town, without a court-house or a Federal officer of any kind, should be entitled to a public building.

I think not. I think that no public building should be erected anywhere unless the needs of the public service demand it.

I can not imagine, for instance, the necessity for a public building to accommodate a postmaster at a salary of $1,200 a year and a clerk at $200 a year. Where the post-office pays practically nothing into the Treasury, where the business is already conveniently conducted in a building with an entire expense, including fuel and light, of $421 per year, at least so long as places of importance—cities where the business of the community requires a large establishment and a considerable force of employees—are not considered at all.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is one question raised by the gentleman from West Virginia which calls for my immediate and careful consideration. I understood him to say in his eloquent remarks setting forth the need— [Applause.] If gentlemen have concluded their kindly demonstrations— [Applause.] I trust, Mr. Speaker, that when the Reporters— [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. BARRETT. I trust that when the Reporters make up their report of this debate they will make it clear that this applause comes from both sides of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. BARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the name of that town that manufactures so very many rubber boots and shoes?

Mr. BARRETT. It is the city of Malden, Mass.

Mr. BRUCKER. And do you represent that district in which this town is located?

Mr. BARRETT. The city of Malden, Mass., Mr. Speaker, is situated in the Seventh Congressional district of Massachusetts, which I do represent on this floor.

Mr. BRUCKER. The gentleman represents it.

Mr. BARRETT. I do.

Mr. BRUCKER. Well, I never would have suspected it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARRETT. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I have not the honor of the gentleman's acquaintance. I am not even able to call him by name, but I wish to thank him for that very brilliant and scintillating expression that has now gotten into the RECORD. [Laughter and applause.]

My friend from Bluefield, W. Va. [Mr. DORR], made the statement that they must have a Federal court in Bluefield, and he gave as a reason that they were obliged now to travel something over 200 miles to reach a Federal court. [Applause.]

And he said that at the last term of court, if I did not misunderstand him [applause], to use his own expression [cries of "Hear!" "Hear!" and applause] it cost "our people" [applause] $10,000 in witness fees [applause] in one case. [Applause.]

Now, as my friend [applause]—well, now, Mr. Speaker [applause], I think that I shall have to ask the Chair to call to order the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUCK] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. [Applause.] Their constant interruptions make it impossible for me to proceed in that orderly way which is the foundation of all legislative decorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BARRETT. I ask the Chair to call to order the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUCK] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], because their constant interruptions make it impossible for me to proceed.

Mr. MERCER. Has not the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts expired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has three minutes more. [Applause.]

Mr. BARRETT. That is just the time I shall need.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to a hearing during this time, as a member of the House, and hopes that no gentleman will interrupt him.

Mr. BARRETT. If by the term "our people" the gentleman from West Virginia means the people of West Virginia, of course he is in manifest error, because of that $10,000 paid for witness fees by his constituents the people of Massachusetts must have paid a much larger amount than did the people of West Virginia, for it came out of the Federal Treasury.

But if, as he states, the denizens of that part of West Virginia received $10,000 in witness fees from the Federal Government because they did not have a court-house in Bluefield—

Mr. DORR. It was a civil case.

Mr. BARRETT. The gentleman corrects me and says it was a civil case instead of a criminal case, which, of course, makes the witness fees, as I understand it, to be paid by the litigants and not from the Federal Treasury. So they just paid it out of one pocket and into another.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like an opportunity to present more fully the various arguments, pro and con, in regard to Bluefield; and in order that the arguments pro might be fairly stated I have, from time to time, so far as possible, yielded to the various gentlemen, especially to the member who represents that district, opportunity to present that side of the case.

I wish merely to say, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that while I always have been and always shall be ready to vote for appropriations for Federal buildings for offices where there is the Federal business to justify it, in the case of Bluefield, W. Va., there is neither the business done by the post-office, nor the number of Federal officials employed, nor the outlook for future Federal business based on any existing state of facts which for a moment warrants the appropriation of a single dollar for the erection of a Federal building.

I challenge any man on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with the exception of my friend from West Virginia [Mr. DORR], whose position I appreciate and do not for a moment question—I challenge any other member of that committee to candidly state on the floor of this House that he believes the Government ought to expend one single cent in erecting a public building in that community.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its attention [applause]; and if I have any time left, I yield it back, with thanks for his courtesy, to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the previous question be ordered upon the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks for the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, on a division (demanded by Mr. BARRETT) there were—ayes 64, noes 62.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARRETT. I ask the gentleman from Vermont not to call for the yeas and nays, and I will ask for tellers under the circumstances.

Mr. PAYNE. This is upon the engrossment and third reading?

The SPEAKER. It is on the third reading.

Mr. PAYNE. Suppose the gentleman lets it go until we come to its passage.

Mr. BARRETT. I do not think we will come to its passage. I ask simply for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. BARRETT, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. MERCER, will please take their places as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 65.

Mr. DORR. Yeas and nays.

Mr. BARRETT. I move to reconsider the last vote and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. One moment: there is a message from the Senate. The Chair will preserve the points of all gentlemen.

Mr. POWERS. I believe I asked the reading of the report before that motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty, the Chair will say to the gentleman from Vermont, is that the gentleman from Nebraska in charge of the bill was intended to be recognized, and the Chair accordingly recognizes him. If the House desires the report read, it can, by voting down the previous question, obtain its desire.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire a separate vote?

Mr. BARRETT. I do not desire to delay this bill, but there are some facts in connection with it which ought to be brought to the attention of the House. If the chairman of the committee will yield to me three minutes— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I desire a separate vote, Mr. Speaker.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment of the House numbered 2 with an amendment as follows: In line 17 in said amendment, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the House agree to the same.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. BERRY. I desire, if I can obtain unanimous consent, to have House bill No. 11916 put upon its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to make the request now, or will he wait until after routine business?

Mr. BERRY. I prefer to do it now if I can get permission. I have been trying to get the floor for several days for this purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I must call for the regular order.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Maine will let me have this bill passed. I have tried for two days to get it up.

Mr. HALE. I will let the Senator have the bill passed, as far as I am concerned, if it does not give rise to any debate.

Mr. BERRY. If it does I will withdraw it immediately.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETTIGREW subsequently said: I see that the Senate this morning passed House bill No. 11916, authorizing the granting of a right of way to a railroad company in the Indian Territory. We have passed a general law on this subject. There are fifteen or twenty of these bills pending. The general law covers the whole question. Therefore the passage of separate bills is unnecessary, and it is giving an unjust advantage, I think. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator who called up the bill is not in his seat at this moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will enter a motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is entered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BERRY subsequently said: The Senator from South Dakota entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which, at my request, the Senate passed this morning House bill No. 11916. I desire to move to lay his motion on the table. The bill has already passed, and he entered a motion to reconsider the vote. I desire to make a motion now, and do make it, to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. HALE. Then let the Senator from Arkansas enter the motion.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; I enter the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, and I will call it up some time during the day. I wish to do it some time when the Senator from South Dakota is in, because the bill has already passed, and I think it is fair that it should be disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the matter of pension legislation, I desire to state that almost every private pension bill which will be reported at this session is already on the Calendar. There is a good deal of pressure in both Houses of Congress that the few bills which are now on the Calendar shall be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will arrange that with the Senator from Florida.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire for unanimous consent? The Chair hears none, and the order is made that half an hour shall be taken for the purpose indicated, between half past 4 and 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not to interfere with the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the consent extends only to 5 o'clock.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as they are reached. Is there any objection to that order of business? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] desires to submit some remarks, and the present will suit his convenience better than any other time. After he has completed his remarks the naval appropriation bill will be up, and I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and one or two others, where the bills will not lead to any debate.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I hope the Senator will include me.

Mr. HALE. You will be included.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that I desire to submit some remarks at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Illinois.

GOVERNMENT OF HAWAII.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call up Senate bill 4893. I do not desire the reading of the bill at this moment, but I should like to have the title read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4893) to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice that I would, if convenient to the Senate, ask leave to submit some remarks to-day upon the bill now under consideration. I do so for the reason especially that it does not appear at this time that the bill is likely to be passed at the present session of Congress, and I think it is due to those people as well, perhaps, as to myself that I should say something upon the subject before this Congress passes away.

Mr. President, it is my purpose to submit to the Senate a brief explanation of the legislation recommended by Congress by the commission appointed by the President in pursuance of public resolution No. 51, entitled "Joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States," approved July 7, 1898.

In a formal expression of its desire to be annexed to this country, the Republic of Hawaii consented to do the following things:

1. To cede absolutely and without reserve to the United States of America all rights of sovereignty of whatever kind in and over the Hawaiian Islands and their dependencies.

2. To cede and transfer to the United States absolute fee and ownership of all public, Government, or Crown lands, all public buildings or edifices, ports, harbors, military equipment, and all other property of every kind and description belonging to the Government of the Hawaiian Islands, together with every right and appurtenance thereunto appertaining.

In due form this consent was signified to this Government, and thereupon the Congress of the United States, with the approval of the President, resolved:

1. To accept, ratify, and confirm said cession and to annex to the United States, as a part of the territory thereof and subject to the sovereign dominion thereof, the said Hawaiian Islands.

2. To vest all and singular the property and rights ceded by the Government of the Hawaiian Islands in the Government of the United States.

3. That the existing land laws of the United States should not apply to the public lands of the Hawaiian Islands, and that Congress should enact special laws for the management and disposition of said lands, and provide by such laws that all revenue from or proceeds of the same should be used solely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands for educational and other local public purposes.

4. That until the Congress should provide for the government of those islands all the civil, judicial, and military powers then being exercised by the officers of the Republic of Hawaii should be vested in such person or persons and should be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States should direct.

5. That the treaties then existing between the Republic of Hawaii and foreign nations should cease and determine forthwith, or might thereafter be concluded, between the United States and such foreign nations.

6. That the municipal legislation of the Hawaiian Islands, not enacted for the fulfillment of the treaties thus extinguished, and not inconsistent with the annexation resolution, and not contrary to the Constitution of the United States, nor to any existing treaty of the United States, should remain in force until the Congress of the United States should otherwise determine.

7. That the Hawaiian customs laws should remain in force until superseded by tariff legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States.

8. That the public debt of the Republic of Hawaii to the amount of $4,000,000, including amounts due to depositors in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank, should be assumed by the Government of the United States.

9. That there should be no further immigration into the Hawaiian Islands except under the laws of the United States, and that no Chinese should be allowed to enter the United States from the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. PERKINS. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Illinois, I should like to ask him what provision was made, if any, in relation to the alien contract laws that are now applicable to every State and Territory of this Union?

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will send for Senate bill 4893 he will find in that bill a provision proposing to extend the laws of the United States on that question over that Territory.

Mr. PERKINS. I am quite familiar with the bill, it having been referred to my committee and reported favorably. But is there any provision now under the treaty?

Mr. CULLOM. None whatever.

Mr. PERKINS. And unless we take action we can import as many contract laborers as we please into those islands.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; they have the same power that they had before we attempted to annex them.

10. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, should appoint five commissioners, two of them at least to be residents of the Hawaiian Islands, who should recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the Hawaiian Islands as they should deem necessary and proper.

In compliance with this resolution, the President appointed as commissioners—from the Senate, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Mr. MORGAN, and myself; from the House of Representatives, Hon. R. R. HITT, of Illinois, and as residents of the Hawaiian Islands, Hon. Sanford B. Dole, President of the republic of Hawaii, and Hon. W. F. Frear, judge of the supreme court of the republic.

The commission met at Honolulu on August 18 last, was organized, and entered at once upon an investigation of the affairs of the Hawaiian government and of the condition of the islands and of their population that extended through two months of time and resulted in the report which is now before the Senate.

All the subjects covered by that report it is not my purpose to comment upon at this time, and I shall endeavor to confine myself to a brief discussion of the legislation concerning the Hawaiian Islands that the commission has deemed it necessary and proper to recommend.

This proposed legislation is contained in three bills submitted with the report of the commission, namely:

1. A bill entitled "A bill to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii."

2. A bill entitled "A bill relating to Hawaiian silver coinage and silver certificates."

3. A bill entitled "A bill relating to the postal savings bank in Hawaii."

The bill relating to silver coinage and silver certificates provides that un mutilated and unabraded Hawaiian silver coins shall be received at par value in payment of all dues to the government of the Territory of Hawaii and of the United States, until January 1, 1902, and shall not be issued again, but shall be received as United States silver pieces; and all Hawaiian silver certificates shall be redeemed by the Territory of Hawaii on or before January 1, 1902. These provisions are so obviously wise and necessary that no discussion of them is, in my opinion, necessary.

The bill relating to the postal savings bank provides for the repeal of the Hawaiian law establishing that bank, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts on deposit in the postal savings bank in Hawaii to the persons entitled thereto, terminating the interest on all deposits on and after July 1, 1899, and forbidding further deposits after that date.

This institution was established in 1884 to encourage the deposit of small savings at interest, with the security of the government for repayment thereof, and was opened for business July 1, 1886. On August 12, 1898, the amount due to 10,553 depositors, classified by nationalities, was as follows:

Americans .....	602
British .....	526
Germans .....	329
Hawaiians .....	1,201
Portuguese .....	495
Sundry nationalities .....	221
Chinese under the board of immigration .....	7,091
A total of .....	10,553
Amounting to .....	$836,297.34
And to 68 special depositors for sums exceeding $500 the sum of .....	77,750.00
Being a total of .....	914,047.34

On these deposits the rate of 4½ per cent per annum is paid by the government of the islands, and interest at this rate is credited to the several accounts on December 31 every year, and is a charge on the current revenues of the government. Deposits up to $500 only are credited with interest. Any deposit of three months' standing may, at the option of the depositor, be withdrawn and exchanged for a 5-20 government bond, with interest at 4½ per cent. Besides these provisions the bank may, at its discretion, issue what are called "term certificates," for not over three months for any amount up to $5,000, and not to exceed in all $150,000 at any one time, at 4½ per cent.

Deposits amounting to over $100 may be withdrawn at ninety days' notice; under $100, without notice.

The cash reserve on hand August 12 last—I state August 12 last because that is the date of the raising of the American flag there and turning the government over to the United States, practically—to meet demands on the savings-bank fund of $914,047.34 was $112,409.23, of which amount $105,000 was at that time on special deposit in the treasury.

In his report to the Hon. Sanford B. Dole, of the commission, Mr. Samuel M. Damon, the Hawaiian minister of finance, says that "during the twelve years of its existence every call by depositors has been promptly met, and the general confidence and usefulness to the community has been shown in its use by all nationalities."

This bank is a part of the postal service of Hawaii, under the control of the minister of finance, and although it may be a meritorious institution, it must fall with the postal service of the islands—must cease to exist when the service to which it is attached is superseded by the postal service of the United States, to which no postal savings bank feature has been yet attached by Congress.

The bill "to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii" is of paramount importance and demands the careful consideration of the Senate.

Mr. President, it is proposed by this bill to erect the Hawaiian Islands into a Territory of the United States, to be styled "the Territory of Hawaii." The name infers the general form of the new government and indicates the possibility of the admission of Hawaii into the Union as a State.

This fact, it seems to me, requires a statement of the reasons on which the commission bases its recommendation of a Territorial form of government for this new acquisition of the United States.

The commission might have recommended a military form of government for the islands; or a government by commission, like that of the District of Columbia; or a government like that of the district of Alaska, which is indeed only a shadowy form of government, lacking the virility of sufficient authority; or the commission might have recommended the form of government which is called colonial government, a loose term which has not yet been clearly defined in its application to American governmental affairs.

Mr. President, at no time in the history of the Government has the proposition been controverted that Congress has the right to admit new States into the Union.

This right is given by a constitutional provision, and it has been exercised repeatedly in the course of our eventful history.

That this right can not be exercised unless there is territory or dominion upon which it may operate and out of which new States may be formed is a proposition so obvious that it needs no elaboration.

In the Articles of Confederation, under which the Revolutionary war was fought, it was provided that Canada might be admitted into the Union; "but"—this was the language of the articles—"no other colony shall be admitted to the same unless such admission be agreed to by nine of the States."

While I had read the Articles of Confederation, I confess that I never had my attention directly called to the fact that the question of the admission of Canada by those in legislative authority had ever been considered at all. But it seems to have been done.

In the Virginia plan of government submitted to the Constitutional Convention in session at New York in 1787 reference was made to the admission of States lawfully arising within the limits of the United States, but in neither of the original drafts of the present Constitution was any provision made to acquire new territory for any purpose.

At that time, however, the Union was possessed of a vast domain, which had been ceded to it by Virginia and other States, and just at that time the Congress of the Confederation, then in session at Philadelphia, passed the famous ordinance of 1787, entitled "An ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio."

Possibly this act of the Congress of the Confederation suggested to the members of the Constitutional Convention that no provision relating to the territory then owned by the States or in reference to the admission into the Union of new States that might be formed out of that domain had been incorporated into the draft of the Constitution which was then under consideration. However this may be, it is a fact that not a long time after the adoption of the ordinance of 1787 the Constitutional Convention, after consideration of a proposed amendment offered by Mr. Madison, to give the "General Legislature" power to dispose of the unappropriated lands of the United States, and to institute temporary government for new States arising therein, adopted a provision giving to Congress power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States.

After the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, the Congress of the United States affirmed the ordinance of 1787, and in pursuance of the provisions of this ordinance the northwestern territory was organized under Territorial governments, and finally was admitted into the Union as the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin.

It was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case that the clause giving power to Congress to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States had reference only to the territory which at the time of the adoption of the Constitution was owned by the Union—the territory that had been ceded to us by the treaty of peace with England or by Virginia and other States.

But before this decision was made we had acquired foreign territory by purchase, conquest, discovery, exploration, and settlement, and had organized this domain under Territorial governments, and had admitted Territories thus organized into the Union as States thereof. In one instance we had treated with a nation, the republic of Texas, as we have treated with the republic of Hawaii, and had admitted it into the Union without the formality of a Territorial government over it having been required.

I have had prepared a table or a set of statistics giving the acquisition of territory by the United States and showing every instance where territory has been acquired up to recent acquisitions, the territory acquired, the date of its acquisition, the establishment of it into governments, and so on, which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD without taking the time to read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it will be found to be a table of some use perhaps to the public hereafter.

The table referred to is as follows:

<sup>3</sup> Embraced in the Northwestern Territory were the lands ceded by the several States having claims to the Western country, namely: New York, on March 1, 1781; Virginia, on March 1, 1784, and on December 30, 1788; Massachusetts, on April 14, 1785; and Connecticut, on September 14, 1786, and confirmed on May 30, 1800.

<sup>4</sup> Ohio was admitted into the Union under the act of April 30, 1802.

<sup>5</sup> South Carolina made this cession under an act March 8, 1787, and the territory ceded was conveyed to the United States on August 9, 1789, by commissioners of that State. The territory ceded by Georgia was conveyed on April 24, 1802, by commissioners of that State, and this act of conveyance was ratified by the State of Georgia on June 16, 1802.

The original area of this territory has been much reduced by the severance of parts in the formation of States and Territories.

<sup>10</sup> In the declaration of war with Spain on April 21, 1898, the United States declared its purpose to free Cuba from the sovereignty of Spain, and then give to the island its independence under a stable form of government.

<sup>11</sup> No Territorial form of government has been established for Alaska. The Territory has a governor, appointed by the President, and the laws of Oregon that are applicable have been extended over the Territory.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, admitting that the clause of the Constitution empowering Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States had reference only to the territory that was owned by the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and that the power conferred in express terms of the Constitution to govern territory belonging to the United States became an exhausted power at the moment when the last State that had been carved out of the territory owned by the Government at the time of the adoption of the Constitution had been admitted into the Union—admitting also, that no express authority has been given by the Constitution to the Government to acquire foreign territory for any purpose, it becomes apparent that we must seek to ascertain under what implied authority of the Constitution the United States have acquired from foreign powers the immense domains to which I have called attention in the table which I have just read, and also by what implied authority Congress has continued the policy of governing territory acquired in various ways and of admitting into the Union upon terms of equality with the original States States carved out of such territory.

It may be stated in a general way that the right to govern is the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire territory, and it may be stated with emphasis that from whatever source its right to acquire territory may be derived the possession of that right by the United States can be questioned no longer.

I know, Mr. President, that Mr. Jefferson, who, while President, negotiated the treaty under which the Province of Louisiana was purchased, doubted whether he was authorized to make this purchase. Indeed, he declared that the Constitution made no provision for our holding foreign territory, still less for incorporating foreign nations into our Union; but in the face of this belief he purchased Louisiana, and public opinion and the courts have determined that his act was not only wise, but that it was also constitutional and in every way valid.

I do not forget that the doubt that Jefferson entertained of the right of the Government to acquire foreign territory for any purpose was also entertained at one time by many of our wisest and most patriotic citizens. Mr. Webster denied the right of the Government to acquire foreign territory in any way, and I recall the fact that in 1844 the legislature of Massachusetts passed resolutions denouncing the then proposed annexation of Texas and declaring that—

As the powers of legislation granted in the Constitution of the United States to Congress do not embrace the case of the admission of a foreign state or foreign territory by legislation into the Union, such an act of admission would have no binding effect upon Massachusetts.

My honorable friend from Massachusetts, the senior Senator [Mr. HOAR], has come down to us from a former generation, with some of the old-time notions of the New England of the days that are no more, but he is only a gentle echo of the nonexpansionist sentiment of those days, and the community behind him, impelled to patriotic action and utterance, follows the President in his wise policy, and gives cheery applause of this policy in the voice of the junior Senator from the old Bay State.

Mr. President, all the doubts entertained in the past concerning the right of the United States to acquire territory, to organize governments over acquired territory, and to admit acquired territory into the Union as States have vanished. Facts have destroyed the theory. In the face of the statesmen who have said "We can not constitutionally acquire territory," we have acquired territory many times, have governed it in its territorial condition, have admitted much of it into the Union as States, and have held some of it, acquired many years ago, out of the Union even to this day.

During the discussion that resulted over the Northwestern Territory, the Louisiana and Florida purchases, and the Texan and slavery questions, the right to acquire territory, to govern it, and to admit it into the Union as States was established, and the following propositions have now the force of law—are indeed the law as it has been declared by the courts of highest jurisdiction and by the legislative and executive departments of the Government:

(1) The Government of the United States, by virtue of the constitutional provisions authorizing it to make war and make treaties, has the right to acquire territory. Under the war-making power the Government may acquire territory by conquest; under the treaty-making power, by purchase or in other ways.

(2) The Government of the United States may acquire territory by cession from a State.

(3) The Government of the United States may acquire territory by discovery, exploration, or settlement.

(4) But including all these propositions it has been established by decisions of our highest court that the United States, as a nation, has the inherent right—the right of absolute sovereignty in this matter—to acquire territory.

(5) Resulting from the right to govern, which logically and necessarily follows from the right to acquire territory, the United States have the right to place any territory owned by the Union under any form of Government that Congress may decide upon, for, in legislating for the Territories of the United States, Congress exercises the combined powers of the General Government and of a State government; that is to say, in legislating for a Territory, which belongs to all the States, Congress has all the authority that has been delegated to it by the States, and has also all the authority that has been reserved by the States—has complete sovereignty—a sovereignty in its relations to the Territories of the Union that is absolute.

(6) Congress may hold any Territory in a Territorial condition for an indefinite period, and may admit into the Union as a State any Territory at any time.

These propositions having been crystallized into law, the denial of the right of the United States to acquire and govern territories must be abandoned, and therefore, in view of present conditions in our affairs, it has become necessary to ascertain the theory upon which the territorial acquisitions of the United States have been governed, and to inquire whether that theory should be adhered to still or whether it should be modified or abandoned.

Mr. President, the Northwestern Territory was governed under the ordinance of 1787, which, as I have stated, was affirmed by the Government after the adoption of the Constitution of 1789. A governor and a secretary of state for the Territory were appointed by the President, who also appointed three judges; and in the governor, secretary, and judges all the legislative power was vested. When the population of the Territory had increased to 5,000 free male inhabitants of full age, this absolutely undemocratic form of government was modified. A legislature was then created, composed of two houses; but the upper house, composed of five members and called the legislative council, was appointed by the President from ten members of the lower house selected by that house, the names of which members were sent to the President.

Sir, no colonial form of government now in existence anywhere is much more undemocratic than were the Territorial governments that were organized under the ordinance of 1787, which ordinance has been commended by all our statesmen as one of the wisest and most beneficent pieces of legislation ever devised by man. It has immortalized Nathan Dane. It has been, says one historian, "the exemplar by which unoccupied domain has been converted into legal territory, and then developed into perfect States."

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CULLOM. I dislike to decline to yield to the Senator, but I would rather not be interrupted, as I am crowded for time.

In 1803, during the Administration of Jefferson, the Province of Louisiana, known to us as the Louisiana purchase, was acquired by treaty. This was the first foreign territory that was annexed to the United States. For a while this newly acquired domain was ruled by the governor of the Territory of Mississippi with absolute authority. "It was in effect," said an eminent judge, "a military despotism over Louisiana, and may suffice as an example of the extent to which the sovereign power over the Territories might go if a wiser policy were not the rule."

Afterwards, in 1804, the Louisiana purchase was divided by Congress into the Territory of Orleans and the district of Louisiana. The Territory of Orleans contained that part of the purchase that is now known as the State of Louisiana, and the district of Louisiana contained all the remainder of the purchase. Over the Territory of Orleans Congress established a government that was essentially undemocratic, and in the district of Louisiana it established a government that was more undemocratic than that of the Territory of Orleans.

In the Territory of Orleans the President appointed a governor and a legislative council composed of 13 persons, residents of the Territory, and those persons were required to be the holders of real estate located within the Territory. Over the district of Louisiana Congress extended the jurisdiction of the governor and judges of the Territory of Indiana, and these officials were vested with almost despotic power. After a year of this kind of government, Congress changed the district of Louisiana into the Territory of Louisiana, and gave to that Territory and to the Territory of Orleans a more liberal but by no means a very democratic government.

This was in 1805, and the government of these Territories remained as then established until in 1812 the Territory of Orleans was admitted into the Union as the State of Louisiana, when the name of the Territory of Louisiana was changed to that of the Territory of Missouri, which continued under the government of 1805 until 1816, when the people of the Territory of Missouri were allowed, for the first time, to have any voice in their own government. In that year a legislature was authorized, composed of two houses, both of which were elected by the people.

In 1819 we acquired Florida by treaty with Spain, and in 1821 we gave to this Territory a government composed of a governor, a secretary, and a legislative council of thirteen persons of the Territory, the governor, the secretary, and the members of the council all being appointed by the President. On March 3, 1845, the Territory of Florida was admitted as a State.

After the organization of the Territory of Florida in 1821 many Territorial governments were organized, but all of these were democratic in form and marked a change in the policy of the Government. Up to the time of the change of the government of the Territory of Missouri in 1816 all our Territorial governments were undemocratic, if not despotic, but none of our Territorial governments organized after the organization of the government of the Territory of Florida were despotic even if they were not entirely democratic.

With these historical facts in relation to the government of the Territories of the United States before us, the question of the form of government that should be recommended for Hawaii gave the commission appointed by the President, under the joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, much concern; and after careful consideration thereof the conclusion was reached that the Congress could not, in good faith, give to the people of those islands a form of government like those that had prevailed before 1816, but that Congress must give to those people a government conferring upon them as complete control of their own affairs as was consistent with the commission's idea of their best interests and the best interests of the United States.

Accordingly, Mr. President, the commission prepared and submitted with its report the bill, entitled "A bill to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," and this bill has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs with proposed amendments that do not change its character in any particular manner.

By this bill, as proposed to be amended by the committee, United States citizenship is conferred upon all persons who were citizens of the republic of Hawaii immediately prior to the transfer of the sovereignty thereof to the United States.

Inhabiting the Hawaiian Islands at this time are the following races and nationalities:

Hawaiians and mixed bloods.....	39,000
Japanese.....	25,000
Chinese.....	21,500
Portuguese.....	15,000
Americans.....	4,000
British.....	2,250
Germans and other Europeans.....	2,000
Polynesian and miscellaneous.....	1,250

A total population of ..... 110,000

By the citizenship provision of the bill as reported by the commission, the Chinese and Japanese inhabitants of the islands were excluded from citizenship; and under the amendment reported by the committee, only about 700 Chinese of the 21,500 Chinese inhabitants of the islands are admitted to citizenship of the United States. It may be estimated that of the other inhabitants of the islands—the population minus the Chinese and Japanese people, say 64,000—probably about 50,000 are citizens of the republic of Hawaii, and, therefore, will become citizens of the United States. This would give a body of about 10,000 electors, who would be entitled to participate in the government of the islands. Of these electors, the great body would be Hawaiians and mixed bloods, and in this fact many persons may see a danger—the danger that a people of this kind may not be intelligent and wise enough to govern themselves in accordance with the principles of free government.

But it must be remembered that the people of Hawaii are neither ignorant nor depraved. On the contrary, they are intelligent, liberal in their opinions, and law-abiding. For nearly sixty years the people of these islands have governed themselves, and, so far as the native Hawaiian and white population are concerned, the percentage of illiteracy is less than in many of the great European countries and less than in some of the States of the American Union. Nearly every native Hawaiian under 40 years of age can read and write his own language, and a great proportion of the Hawaiian children of school age can read and write the English language. The Hawaiian school system is an excellent one, and of the native children within school age nearly 98.50 per cent are regular school attendants.

The number of schools, teachers, and pupils in the Hawaiian schools is as follows:

	Schools.	Teachers.			Pupils.
		Male.	Female.	Total.	Male.	Female.	Total.
Public schools, English.....	131	122	175	297	5,903	4,634	10,537
Public schools taught in Hawaiian.....	1	1		1	17	9	26
Private schools.....	60	82	127	209	2,062	1,862	3,924
Total.....	192	205	302	507	8,017	6,505	14,522

Of the children of the islands within school age, 96.20 per cent attend schools.

It can not be said of those who believe that educated people are qualified for self-government that the people of the Hawaiian Islands who would be made citizens by the bill now before the Senate are not fitted for such citizenship.

The commission's bill further provides that the legislative power of the Territory of Hawaii shall be vested in a legislature consisting of two houses, a senate and a house of representatives; that the senate shall be composed of 15 members, holding for the term of four years; that the house of representatives shall be composed of 30 members, to be elected every second year under what is known as the minority system of representation, which now prevails in the islands.

The bill, as amended by the committee, provides that a representative shall be 25 years old and be a male citizen of the United States; that he shall have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years and shall be qualified to vote for representatives.

In order to be qualified to vote for representatives a person shall—

- (1) Be a male citizen of the United States.
- (2) Have resided in the Territory not less than one year preceding and in the representative district in which he offers to register not less than three months immediately preceding the time at which he offers to register.
- (3) Have attained the age of 21 years.
- (4) Prior to each regular election, during the time prescribed by law for registration, have caused his name to be entered on the register of voters for representative for his district.
- (5) Prior to such registration have paid, on or before the 31st day of March next preceding the date of registration, all taxes due by him to the government.
- (6) Be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language.

It is provided that the qualifications of a senator shall be that he is a male citizen of the age of 30 years who has been a resident of the Hawaiian Islands three years and is qualified to vote for senators.

In order to be qualified to vote for senators a person must possess all the qualifications and be subject to all the conditions required of voters for representatives, and in addition thereto he shall own and be possessed in his own right of real property in the Territory of the value of not less than $1,000 and upon which legal taxes shall have been paid on that valuation for the year next preceding the one in which such person offers to register, or shall have actually received a money income of not less than $600 during the year next preceding the 1st day of April next preceding the date of each registration.

It will be observed that both a property and an educational qualification are required for the position of senator and also for voters for senators, and that an educational qualification is required for the position of representative and also for voters for representatives.

Mr. President, the laws of Hawaii now in force require a property qualification for the positions of both senator and representative, and this commission concluded that this feature of the present law was wise and recommended its retention; but the committee has modified it somewhat, and to this modification I shall suggest no objection.

Sir, the theory of our political system is based upon the fundamental proposition that the ultimate sovereignty is in the people, from whom springs all legitimate political authority. Basing this assertion upon this theoretical idea, it has been said recently by an eminent citizen, that "our nation must give up any intention of entering upon a colonial policy such as is now pursued by European countries, or it must abandon the doctrine that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed."

It would be difficult to find in any form of European colonial government more of the essential elements of despotic government than were to be found in the Territorial government system of the United States from the time of the organization of the government for the Northwestern Territory, under the ordinance of 1787, down to the final abandonment of that system. However, notwithstanding the harsh features of our early Territorial government system, liberty did not perish from the earth, and in the end the fundamental theory of our Government was not destroyed.

On the contrary, it was strengthened by the harsh enactments which sought to prevent the possibility of the government of the Territories passing into the control of classes whose capacity or moral fitness to govern was generally denied; and this fact suggests that while the political maxim that government rests on the consent of the governed not only glitters as a generality and is essentially true, it seems to have been modified, in its practical application, into the formula that government rests on the consent of the governed whenever the governed are qualified to participate in the operations of the government and have the opportunity, the desire, and the power so to do.

In our own Government it is observed that sovereignty rests in the voters, and the voters are a special class of citizens, that class of citizens the members of which are permitted by the constitution of the State in which they reside to govern the governed without their consent and to deny representation to citizens upon whom heavy burdens of taxation are imposed. Indeed, the horn-books of American constitutional law all show that certain classes in all free governments have been almost universally excluded from the right to participate in governmental affairs. According to one great authority the theory in these cases is that classes are excluded because they lack either the intelligence, the virtue, or the liberty of action essential to the proper exercise of the elective franchise.

The rule by which the presence or absence of these qualifications is to be determined—is not easy to establish on grounds the reason and propriety of which shall be accepted by all. It must be one that is definite and easy of application, and it must be made permanent or an accidental majority may at any time change it so as to usurp all power to themselves. But to be definite and easy of application it must also be arbitrary. The infant of tender years is wanting in competency, but he is daily acquiring it, and a period is fixed at which he shall conclusively be presumed to possess what is requisite.

I quote from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (pages 27, 28, 29)—

The alien may know nothing of our political system and laws, and he is excluded until he has been domiciled in the country for a period judged to be sufficiently long to make him familiar with its institutions; races are sometimes excluded arbitrarily; and there have been times when in some States the possession of a certain amount of property or the capacity to read was regarded as essential to satisfactory proof of sufficient freedom of action and intelligence.

Since this exposition of the fundamental principle of our Government was penned certain States of the Union have adopted the educational test of qualification to exercise the right of suffrage, and, according to certain politicians, have thus made an advance away from the fundamental principle of the Republic—what is, indeed, the true theory of our Government when properly asserted—that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed. In some local elections it is quite common still to require property qualifications or the payment of taxes in the voter. Many special statutes referring to the people of a municipality the question of voting and to internal improvements have confined the right of voting on the question to taxpayers. (State vs. Woodruff, 2 Day, 504; Catlin vs. Smith, 2 S. & R., 267; Opinions of Judges, 18 Pick., 575.)

In view of the many precedents for such a rule, and in view, too, of the conditions now confronting us in Hawaii and our other newly acquired territory, the provisions of the Hawaiian bill in reference to the qualifications of members of the legislative branch of the government and for voters are, in my opinion, both wise and timely.

The legislative powers and limitations provided by the bill are as follows:

- (1) To legislate upon all subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States.
- (a) But the legislature shall not grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the approval of Congress.
- (b) Nor shall the legislature grant private charters. But—
- (2) The legislature may, by general act, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate—
  - (a) For manufacturing, agricultural, and other industrial pursuits;
  - (b) For conducting the business of insurance, savings banks, banks of discount and deposit (but not of issue), loan, trust, and guaranty associations;
  - (c) For the establishment and for conducting cemeteries;
  - (d) For the construction and operation of railroads, wagon roads, vessels, and irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith;
  - (e) For the construction and operation of colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any other benevolent, charitable, or scientific association.
- (3) No divorce shall be granted by the legislature, and the legislature shall not authorize the courts of the Territory to grant any divorce unless the applicant for the divorce shall have resided in the Territory for one year next preceding the application.
- (4) The legislature shall not authorize nor allow any lottery or sale of lottery tickets.
- (5) No public money shall be appropriated for the support or benefit of any sectarian, denominational, or private school, or of any school not under the exclusive control of the Government.
- (6) The legislature shall not authorize the Territory, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, to make any subscription to the capital stock of any incorporated company, or in any manner to lend its credit for the use of any such company.
- (7) The legislature shall not authorize any debt to be contracted by the Territory, or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, except to meet a casual deficit in the revenues or to pay the interest on any existing indebtedness, to suppress insurrections.

rection, or to provide for the common defense; provided that in addition to any indebtedness created for any of the purposes thus recited loans may be authorized for the erection of penal, charitable, and educational institutions, and for public buildings, wharves, roads, and harbor and other public improvements, but the total of such indebtedness incurred in any one year shall not exceed 1 per cent upon the assessed value of taxable property of the Territory or subdivision thereof, as the case may be, and the total indebtedness of the Territory shall not at any time be extended beyond 7 per cent of the assessed value, and the total indebtedness of any subdivision shall not at any time be extended beyond 3 per cent of the assessed value; nor shall any such loan be made upon the credit of the public domain or any part thereof; nor shall any bond or other instrument of any such indebtedness be issued unless made redeemable in not more than five years and payable in not more than fifteen years from the date of the issue thereof.

(8) The legislature is authorized to create counties and town and city municipalities, and provide for the government thereof. The governor and secretary of the Territory are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the Territory is to be allowed to send a Delegate to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, to this provision of the bill permitting a Delegate in Congress no objection should in my opinion be made.

It may be laid down as a general principle of our form of government that no body of people existing within the jurisdiction of our laws and governed by us should be denied the right of representation in the popular branch of the Congress. "No taxation without representation" was a popular cry of the American colonists, and the arguments which justified this demand as a sound general principle and vindicated it finally in the appeal to arms made by our Revolutionary forefathers is as vital to-day as it ever was, and it should not be disregarded by us in our treatment of any people over whose destiny the results of diplomacy or war have made us a dominant force.

I am aware, as I have stated, that this general rule of republican government, a twin of the rule that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed, is necessarily subject to certain exceptions which I have already briefly enumerated, but the exceptions I have referred to do not weaken the rule, and it is certainly our duty to allow representation to every community living under our jurisdiction and not in a condition of statehood, provided the people of the community are submissive to our authority, have intelligence enough to consider their own affairs, and possess a sufficient knowledge of our form of government to exercise under it the ordinary functions of its citizenship.

That the people of the Hawaiian Islands are qualified to manage their own affairs, and are entitled to a Delegate in the House of Representatives to voice their will, no one who has a knowledge of the Hawaiian question should deny. The native Hawaiians are, as it has been expressed in the report of the commission, "a kindly, affectionate people, confiding, friendly, and liberal," and they are intelligent to a degree of intelligence that has not been attained by many of the communities of the Union. For nearly sixty years they have enjoyed a constitutional form of government based on the American system, and, tested by any reasonable test, Hawaii will show that she has a right to come under the principle that entitles every intelligent, American-spirited community to representation in the Congress of the United States.

To this statement it is objected that to permit Hawaii to have a Delegate in Congress is a step in the direction of permitting the Territory to have at some time Senators and Representatives in Congress; that it is a step, in fact, in the direction of her admission into the Union. This consummation is undesirable, in the opinion of some, because, as they assert, no Territory separated from the mainland should ever be admitted as a State. These objectors insist that all Territories of this kind should be held as colonies. It may be said in reply to these colony advocates that it would be a waste of words to attempt to distinguish between a Territorial and a colonial form of government under the Constitution of the United States.

The only distinction that, in my understanding, can be urged between a Territorial and a colonial form of government is that the former contemplates ultimate statehood and the latter permanent dependency. But this distinction can rest only in the intention of Congress, and one Congress can not bind another, and a mere question of intention as to what shall be done ultimately with new territory can not be considered in passing upon the constitutionality of the suggested form of government. So far as the form of government is concerned, as distinguished from the intention as to what ultimately shall become of the territory, this is a mere question of name and not of substance. No name or form of government can prevent a Territory or colony from ultimately becoming a State, nor can any name or form of government lead to statehood necessarily.

It is all a question of intention or policy for the time being. It is immaterial whether the government is called Territorial or colonial. In either case the Territory or colony may or may not become a State. A mere name or length of time does not determine this, but other circumstances, such as population, the character of the inhabitants, location, and so forth, determine this. There is no more limit to the life of a Territory than there is to the life of a colony. A Territory may continue indefinitely. Alaska is not much, if any, nearer statehood to-day than it was when first acquired thirty years ago. If it is undesirable to make States of Territories separated from the mainland, such Territories may be kept in a dependent position, and that, too, whether they are called Territories or colonies. There may be no difference between the form of government of a Territory and that of a colony. As a matter of fact, the United States has adopted a number of forms of government for its Territories, and England has adopted a number of forms of government for its colonies. The question of real importance is what form of government is best suited to the country—whether it is called a Territory or a colony. The question is not by what name shall that form of government be called. As a matter of fact, both the United States and the United Kingdom have always acted on the principle of adapting the government of their Territories and colonies to the circumstances and needs of the particular case for the time being. The United Kingdom has established all grades of government for its colonies, from that in which the local inhabitants have no voice whatever to that in which there is the most liberal representative government.

Some of the British colonies approach statehood, in respect of independence and representative government, even more than some of the organized Territories in the United States. In the United States for many years, as under the ordinance of 1787 and succeeding ordinances and statutes, the Territorial governments were much less organized than some of them are at present, and yet that did not prevent them from afterwards becoming States; and there is nothing to prevent Alaska becoming a State, if circumstances in time shall justify this, even though at the present time it has practically only a partially organized Territorial government. The whole history of Territorial government in this country, in fact, shows that neither the name nor the form of government for the time being has been material upon the question of ultimate statehood.

If Hawaii were made a colony, this would not prevent it from becoming a State at some future time if circumstances so demanded and Congress should so determine. If, on the other hand, it is made a Territory, this will not insure that it will become a State. In either case it might be given a government, by whatever name called, either more or less liberal than the governments of British colonies or some American Territories. The real question is, What is the best form of government for the islands at the present time, considering both the needs of the islands and the form of government already existing there and the interests of the United States and the forms of government approved by American opinion?

It is obvious that Congress should be troubled as little as possible with legislation for the islands on the one hand, and that for this reason as well as because it is in harmony with American and republican institutions, the islands should be given as liberal and representative a government as can safely be given them. Hawaii does not ask to be admitted as a State. If the time ever comes when the number and character of her population are such as to otherwise entitle her to statehood, it will then be time enough to consider whether it is good policy to admit as a State a Territory separated from the mainland.

Whatever is done with Hawaii can not be regarded as a precedent as to what shall be done with the other islands recently acquired. Hawaii stands alone. Her case is unique. Hawaii is already an American country and has been for many years. Her people are American in spirit and totally different from the vast numbers who inhabit the other newly acquired islands and who do not appreciate or understand republican institutions. Hawaii has enjoyed a constitutional government for nearly sixty years framed on the American system. In the very nature of the case none of the other islands could expect the same degree of local self-government as Hawaii, even though it may be thought best that Hawaii, as well as those other islands, should not, because of separation from the mainland, ever become a State.

Mr. President, Hawaii, an independent nation, has come to us upon her own motion, and we have dealt with her as an equal. We have accepted her sovereignty upon terms agreed upon, and, in view of this fact, it will become us to deal with her liberally, and give to her an opportunity to develop her resources under the operations of our republican form of government. Whatever may be done with our other new acquisitions, acquired by conquest in a war remarkable in the annals of history, it is a duty which we owe to ourselves, as well as to Hawaii, to receive her in the manner suggested by the commission.

Mr. President, it may be possible that the counsel of some who are halting patriots may prevail, and the flag of the Republic may be lowered in Porto Rico and in the Philippines, and we may leave the people thereof to the disasters of civil conflict and the rapacity of monarchical government. We may refuse, in the instance of these blood-bought acquisitions, to do our duty as a nation that boasts of its sympathy with the down-trodden peoples of the earth, but this I do not believe. Certainly the patriotic impulses of the people, even if there were not other consideration than national pride to affect our actions, would not permit any administration to lower the flag, either in Porto Rico or the Philippines.

But, however this may be, no one, not even the most ultra of the leaders of the party of stagnation, would dare now to challenge the right of the flag of the American Republic to float in the sunlit air of the Hawaiian Islands. In Hawaii the flag has been raised to the top of the staff, and it has been nailed there, and therefore no one, speaking with the voice of this Government, will ever dare to say to Hawaii: "Return from following after us; go your own way!" We have accepted Hawaii, and henceforth she must walk with us along the pathway of our manifest destiny.

Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I called up the bill this morning for the purpose of making these remarks. After the appropriation bills are disposed of—and one Senator is now upon his feet to take the floor to call up an appropriation bill—I should like to secure the consideration and passage of the Hawaiian bill, but I can not ask it at this time, and I therefore will let it go over for the present.

NATIONAL POLICY.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that Order of Business No. 15, subjects on the table, be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 191) declaring that under the Constitution of the United States no power is given to the Federal Government to acquire territory to be held and governed permanently as colonies.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, within a very few hours the Fifty-fifth Congress will become a thing of the past, and my service here will be at an end. March 4, 1893, without any previous parliamentary experience, and representing to a certain extent a new and thitherto unknown political party, I took my seat in this Chamber as a Senator from Nebraska. I was at that time, as I have since been and am now, a Populist, believing in the doctrines of the party as promulgated by its national platform, and giving to it my undivided allegiance. At this time, and when I am soon again to take my appropriate place among the people of my State, who honored me beyond my merits in sending me to the Senate as one of their representatives, it is fitting that I should say a word.

To be the pioneer of a new political party in the United States Senate, which in its inception incurred the bitter hostility of the two old parties, was by no means an easy or satisfactory task. It required some fortitude and stability, some determination, to stand by the principles of the organization whatever might betide the individual.

The first years of my service here were spent in combating assaults on the party to which I belong. It was at that time freely held by many opposition Senators to be the advocate of nihilism and anarchy, and all that is bad in politics and in political thought. But such has been the progress since then that during the last two years and a half or more I have heard none of these epithets used against it.

It would be unjust for me to take my leave of the Senate without acknowledging a debt of personal gratitude to those with whom I have for the last six years been associated in the discharge of the public business. Personal friendships have sprung up, not bounded by party lines or tainted by political opinions, which, so far as I am concerned, will remain through life. Fifty changes have taken place in the personnel of the Chamber since I entered it, there having died during my service Joseph H. Earle, of South Carolina; Leland Stanford, of California; Daniel W. Voorhees, of Indiana; Edward C. Walthall, of Mississippi; Z. B. Vance, of North Carolina; Calvin S. Brice, of Ohio; Joseph N. Dolph, of Oregon; John R. McPherson, of New Jersey; Nathan F. Dixon, of Rhode Island; A. H. Colquitt, of Georgia; Francis B. Stockbridge, of Michigan; J. Z. George, of Mississippi; Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont; Richard Coke, of Texas; and Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee.

All these gentlemen occupied desks during my incumbency. I knew them personally, and shall always count them among my important and valued acquaintances. I not only acknowledge the general and almost uniform courtesy I have received at the hands of Senatorial associates, but I must also acknowledge my debt of gratitude to the late Vice-President, Mr. Stevenson, and the present Vice-President, Mr. HOBART, for uniform courtesy, fairness of treatment, and impartiality of rulings.

Mr. President, I shall retire from the Chamber with mingled feelings of pleasure and regret. I have not thus far in my life sought a seat in this or in the other branch of Congress. My election came to me six years ago without solicitation, and if I should again at any time be elected it will be when my fellow-citizens believe that I can represent them to advantage, and without my seeking the office.

I shall retire with the consciousness of having discharged my duties as faithfully and conscientiously as I was capable of doing, and feeling that I have cast no vote and uttered no word in debate that I would not again cast or utter under like circumstances. I will go from here with a sense of freedom from the responsibility of the great office I have held, and will with pleasure again turn my face westward to dwell among a people with whom I have lived for so many years, and who have so signally honored me and for whom I have the deepest feelings of affection.

Mr. President, over forty years of my life have been spent west of the Mississippi River. I am peculiarly a Western product, of Western birth, raising, and education. My language and manners are those of the West, and while I feel myself broad enough to take within my patriotic vision and duly appreciate every section of the Union, frankness compels me to admit that I have a keener affection for the West than for any other locality of our common country.

I will leave this Chamber with the single regret that I am compelled to sever pleasant personal associations with those for whom I have formed a strong personal attachment. Unaided and alone during my life, I have sought the acquisition of useful knowledge that would not only be of benefit individually, but would benefit those around me. I have not, as some, enjoyed the schools, but my education has been drawn from the world and from close contact with the masses of my kind, supplemented by reading of my own selection.

Mr. President, I will carry with me very different ideas of the United States Senate from those I entertained when I came here. Great and important as is this body, I do not doubt that it can be duplicated by any State in the Union, and I do not say this in a disparaging sense, nor do I intend to lessen the respect due to the Senate as a whole, or to each member of this honorable body. I regard it rather as a compliment to the Senate, and certainly it is a tribute to the American people, to say that any State can furnish 90 men possessing all the knowledge and mental equipment necessary for the transaction of the public business in this branch of Congress. A sense of relief from the perplexing duties of official life and of joy in returning to those I honor and respect, and with whom I shall spend the remainder of my days, will greatly compensate for the severance of the pleasant association with Senators which I would enjoy if I remained in the Chamber.

Mr. President, during my stay here political events have been rapid, radical, and important. Mistakes have been made by both the Republican and the Democratic party that will require years to repair, if indeed they can ever be undone. In 1893 the Democratic party made its first fatal blunder by an unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver act. It bowed to the caprice of Grover Cleveland, who was elected President on a free-silver platform, when it should have stood as firm as a rock and resisted every encroachment upon that act unless it were accompanied by a provision for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the present legal ratio. I knew then, as I know now, that it was a mistake, and it was with some chagrin that I saw a portion of the Democratic party here bow in humble submission to the will of Wall street.

In 1894 the Democratic party made another mistake in failing to give tariff reform to the country in accordance with its platform pledges of 1892. Conflicting and divergent interests were warring in the Chamber, and the result was the Wilson tariff act of 1894 proved in many respects more onerous and burdensome to the people than the "war act" bearing the name of the late venerable Senator from Vermont, Mr. Morrill.

There was a partial attempt to atone for the error of repealing the purchasing clause of the Sherman act by the enactment of the seigniorage bill, but a horde of bankers and brokers from New York came down upon the President and it was promptly vetoed; and now it is openly and boldly declared by the advocates of the single gold standard that silver is a dead issue. But, sir, that remains to be again tested.

Mr. President, during Mr. Cleveland's Administration there were added to the interest-bearing debt of the United States, in round numbers, $263,000,000, and thus far during Mr. McKinley's Administration there have been added $200,000,000, with the bright prospect of $300,000,000 additional before the close of his term.

It may be admitted that there has been some change for the better in the industrial affairs of the country, but it is temporary and as deceptive as the flush that mounts the cheek of the consumptive, deceiving him into the belief that he is speedily recovering to the moment dissolution is reached. Existing conditions are unnatural. They have been unnaturally stimulated by the war, by a prodigal expenditure of money, and by an increase in various ways in the public debt that will have to be paid by the taxpayers in the future. Then the truth will be known and the burden will be felt by all.

Mr. President, in the war between the United States and Spain there was no party line in this Chamber. Every Senator advocated the granting of, and cheerfully voted for, all the men and money necessary to successfully conduct it, and in the field and on the ship Populists, Democrats, and Republicans stood shoulder to shoulder in the discharge of their duties as soldiers and seamen in defense of the honor of our country and the integrity of our flag. It was decidedly an American war, and no political party is entitled to, or will receive, any special advantage growing out of it.

But, Mr. President, the Republican party has reached the edge of the precipice. It stands confronted with a serious problem in the Philippine Archipelago, by an act of its own Administration. To-day we are engaged in warring with those who a few months ago were our friends and allies—warring with a people who do not seek to trespass upon the United States or on our rights, but who, like our ancestors and ourselves, claim the inalienable right to select for themselves the form of government and political institutions under which they will live. They seek to enforce the doctrine of the Declaration of Independence.

We hold—

It is there said—

these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

This statement is not confined to the people of the United States. It is without limitation, and applies to the people of all distinct territories seeking to re-form their government or to institute new government adapted to their conditions and wants. If the Republican party shall undertake to hold permanently the Philippines without the consent of the American people, and without the consent of the Filipinos themselves, they will be guilty of overturning the very foundation on which this Republic rests. That there is such a purpose at this time no one keenly alive to the situation will for a moment doubt. The nation is to be cast upon the dangerous and uncertain sea of imperialism, with all the complications and evil consequences that may follow; and if, in the stretch of years to come, this shall in any degree change our Government and make its burdens heavier, and entail upon the people new complications and new dangers, they will be directly traceable to the maladministration of the Republican party and to the unbridled and unpatriotic ambition of its leaders.

Mr. President, I hold it to be true that ours should be a purely domestic policy that will build up the home Government and make our people stronger, richer, and happier, and at the same time strengthen and fortify them against every foe within and without, and that our foreign policy should be incident to a strong home policy and not independent of it. If we are to change a domestic policy for one of imperialism, we will be subject to the complications and dangers of the most reckless European government, past or present.

It should not be thought by any that the Populist party is not a compact, well-equipped political organization. It represents two million and a half votes. Its platform of 1896 is the test of its faith, and that platform remains intact in every sentence, plank, and provision. It will not be materially changed. Monetary reform, anti-imperialism, and other great issues will be submitted by the party to the people in 1900, and they will be called on to determine at the ballot box whether they are willing to throw away, in the mad race for the forcible colonization of foreign peoples and alien territories, the principles of liberty won by their ancestors and maintained by themselves, that should be transmitted untainted to their posterity. What their verdict will be after the issue is fully presented to them I have no doubt.

Mr. President, in what I have said I have in no manner undertaken to discuss connectedly any of the questions referred to, but I have spoken in a general way, partly personal, partly prophetic, and somewhat reminiscent.

Mr. President, in the great gallery of the ancient and modern world hangs the picture of this Union of States, the most beautiful and lovely of all nations. More than a century ago it was painted by master hands, and its colors, dimmed by years, have been touched to life by the blood of our ancestors and our sons, battling for freedom and its maintenance for all time.

Doubtless years will again dim its hues and dust obscure its beauties, or it may be neglected and a blotch find lodgment on it; but a quickened intelligence and a renewed patriotism will raise up others to wield the brush and bring it new life and cause its beauties to show forth in greater splendor than before; and for numberless ages to come we may confidently hope it to remain the fairest of all the earth.

The memories of dead patriots in every nook and hamlet, in the busy marts of trade, and on every spot of this great continent, are sacred to all, and the blood of battle fields, stretching from Lexington to Santiago, will again weld the affections of the people, for on these fields, in the cause of the human race, the blood of thousands of our soldiers has been shed, while on the ocean our sailors have freely laid down their lives in the defense of the flag.

Sir, may we not confidently hope that there will be a new baptism of patriotism in public life and that every man will renew his faith in our institutions and again dedicate his life to the cause of popular freedom on this continent? God grant that our country may live for all time, the hope and refuge of the oppressed who seek its free institutions and the protection of its flag. I join Longfellow in his beautiful apostrophe to the Ship of State—

Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity, with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
We know what Master laid thy keel,
What Workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope!
Fear not each sudden sound and shock—
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee—are all with thee!

BET-SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of Congress, a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, covering a report on the progress of the beet-sugar industry in the United States during the year 1898. It embraces the results of numerous chemical analyses and the observations made by a special agent in various parts of the United States.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1899.

CONSTRUCTION OF PENSION ACT OF 1890.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, in two or three cases I have consented that Senators may bring up small bills that will lead to no debate.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me to have a short bill passed?

Mr. HALE. If it is a short bill, I will yield.

Mr. PRITCHARD. If it leads to any debate, I will withdraw it. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 216) construing the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents."

Resolved, etc., That the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," is construed and held to include all persons who served for ninety days in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom: Provided, however, That the foregoing shall not apply to those who served in the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth regiments United States Volunteer Infantry who had a prior service in the Confederate army or navy, nor to those who had a prior Confederate service who did not enlist in the Union service prior to December 1, 1864.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECKNAGEL & CO.

Mr. HALE. For the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who has gone out of the Chamber, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2409) for the relief of Recknagel & Co., if it gives rise to no debate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the bill lie over until I can look at it and the report. It is not a bill that ought to be taken up and passed without examination.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

Mr. BATE. With the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who has charge of the naval appropriation bill, I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1959) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HALE. If it is a long bill, I must object.

Mr. BATE. Oh, no; it is only a couple of pages.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. BATE. It is to pay some small claims which have been audited and disposed of by the Treasury Department. It is a House bill, and it will take but a moment. There is no objection to it.

The reading of the bill was concluded; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the bill passed the House?

Mr. BATE. Oh, yes; it is a House bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Are these Fourth of July claims?

Mr. BATE. Yes. The bill was favorably reported by the committee of the Senate without opposition. The claims have been passed upon by the Department.

Mr. SPOONER. Have all the cases been passed upon by the Court of Claims?

Mr. BATE. All have been passed upon by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SPOONER. They are Fourth of July claims?

Mr. BATE. Yes; Fourth of July claims. They amount to only $3,600 in all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION.

C., May 10, 1899; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in reference to it.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to lend to the executive committee of the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion to be held at Charleston, S. C., May 10, 1899, 2,000 tents, 10,000 mattresses, 10,000 cots, or as many as may be available without detriment to the public service, and that said cots, tents, and mattresses shall be shipped to the quartermaster of the United States Army on duty at Charleston, who shall take the receipt of the representative of said executive committee, guaranteeing their safe return: Provided, That no expenditure of money for freight or storage of these cots shall be made at the charge of the United States while thus used.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 15, to insert:

For provisions, clothing, fuel, military stores, transportation and recruiting, forage, and hire of quarters for officers and men to be commissioned and enlisted previous to June 30, 1899, $30,400, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 2, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses, Marine Corps, from $37,500 to $57,500.

on page 60, line 6, after the word "delivery," to insert "and not more than two of the four battle ships and armored cruisers herein provided for and not more than two of the protected cruisers herein provided for shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party;" in line 16, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out "seagoing battle ships, and one and not more than one of the aforesaid armored cruisers," and insert "four seagoing battle ships and armored cruisers;" in line 23, after the word "said," to strike out "vessels, or either of them," and insert "vessel;" and on page 61, line 3, after the word "said," to strike out "vessels, or either of them," and insert "vessel;" so as to make the clause read:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract two seagoing coast line battle ships, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class upon a trial displacement of about 13,500 tons, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,600,000 each; two armored cruisers of about 12,000 tons trial displacement, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and four protected cruisers of about 2,500 tons trial displacement, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest speed compatible with good cruising qualities, great radius of action, and to carry the most powerful ordnance suited to vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $1,141,800 each; and the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and not more than two of the four battle ships and armored cruisers herein provided for, and not more than two of the protected cruisers herein provided for, shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party; and in the construction of all said vessels all of the provisions of the act of May 4, 1898, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," shall be observed and followed; and subject to the provisions hereinafter made, one and not more than one of the aforesaid four seagoing battle ships and armored cruisers shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or in the waters connecting therewith: Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for such contracts when the same are opened and examined by him, said vessel can not be constructed on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean at a cost not exceeding 4 per cent above the lowest accepted bid for the other battle ships or cruisers provided for in this act, he shall authorize the construction of said vessel elsewhere in the United States, subject to the limitations as to cost hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 20, after the word "expended," to insert "for armor;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I have one or two formal amendments. Will the Secretary turn to page 33? After the word "available," in line 9, I move to insert as a caption "Public buildings and grounds at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md." It does not change the text.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand that the paragraph between lines 10 and 16 relates to the Naval Academy?

Mr. HALE. Yes; and to nothing else. It might not be known what it referred to without that caption.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 9, after the word "dollars," in line 12, I move to insert the language of existing law, which I send to the desk. It was omitted by mistake.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 12, page 9, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, purchase by contract all or any part of such guns.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, in lines 5 and 6, on page 9 of the pending bill, is the following language:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $1,000,000.

That would seem to involve a great deal, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in its present phraseology it means much more than any of us intend. Heretofore the policy of this Government has been pretty well fixed, not only in regard to expenditures for the Navy, but in most other branches of expenditure, that the Government was not to bring itself unnecessarily into competition with the private enterprise of the country.

This policy has been pursued, with very little deviation from it, from the foundation of the Government, and all seem to have recognized that our great growth in wealth and industrial activity has been largely promoted by a steady adherence to that policy.

This country has been built up by the free play of the economic forces that have been promoted and brought into activity by private enterprise and by individual initiative; and if we are now, at this late day, to enter upon a different policy, we ought to do it with our eyes open, for the consequences are far-reaching and may be very serious.

I do not know what is intended precisely by this provision in regard to the manufacture and purchase of smokeless powder nor why this very large appropriation of a million dollars of the people's money should be employed in order to set up manufacture in opposition to the private enterprise of the people themselves. We have no experience, in the first place, in the matter of Government manufacture and Government construction, the carrying on of any business apart from merely governmental business, that would justify such a resort to Government manufacture in this case.

Happily our experience has been that with the free play of competition the Government has been able to provide for itself in a much more economical way by calling upon its citizens who are engaged in various enterprises in the country to supply its wants. It has taken less of the people's money, it has encouraged a diversity of industry in our country itself, and has promoted all those business activities which go to make up a great and prosperous industrial people. I therefore hope that in this matter some such amendment as this which I shall offer at the end of line 6, after the word "dollars," may be adopted. I should like to insert the words:

Of which not more than $150,000 shall be expended in manufacture.

So that the clause would read:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $1,000,000, of which not more than $150,000 shall be expended in manufacture.

There is no objection, of course, and I have no objection, to the proper expenditure of money in the proving grounds down at Indian Head and in testing experiments which can be properly carried on by the Government, but I have very serious objection to the Government entering into competition with the powder manufacturers of the United States, some of whom are in my own State. They have for a hundred years been carrying on this industry with great skill, with great usefulness, and with great probability, and have established a plant there that has been useful to the Government and useful to the people at large. They have built up for themselves a character which redounds to the credit of this country, and their commercial honor and their manufacturing skill are a part of the character of the country and go to make up in the total the public estimate of this country, of which we should all be proud. I therefore propose some such language as an amendment to the bill. I do not know that anything else is intended.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Delaware has called the attention of the Senate to the matter of supplying the Navy Department with smokeless powder. The Committee on Appropriations, and also the Committee on Naval Affairs, are thoroughly in accord with the Senator, believing that almost all of the work requisite in building up the Navy can be secured at better advantage in private establishments than in Government establishments.

In this case the amendment which the Senator from Delaware has offered was before the committee. The reason why it was not inserted was that we summoned the head of this Bureau, the Bureau of Ordnance, and asked him how he proposed to expend the million dollars. He said that only a small portion of it, perhaps $150,000, could be expended in the Government plant, that the capacity of that plant was not great, and that the intention was that the balance should be purchased from manufacturers under contracts or under bids. On his assurance that that would be done the Senate committee did not put in the amendment.

I have no doubt, I will say to the Senator, that what he desires to accomplish will be accomplished without the amendment. I should myself be restive if I supposed that the Government establishment was going on and intended in the future to manufacture all this powder. It can not do it as reasonably or cheaply as private establishments can.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the object which the Senator from Maine says he wishes to accomplish can be best secured by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware. I have no powder factories in my section of the country, but I do have an interest in the question of policy, and that question should be settled by Congress and not by the statements made by the executive officers of the Government.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will forego the rest of his good speech I will accept the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would rather have that than the speech, of course.

Mr. HALE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish I could always make an impression so quickly upon the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is constantly making impressions upon me, and very good ones.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed after line 9, on page 44, to insert:

The act of June 10, 1896, authorizing the construction, in the discretion of the Secretary, of two submarine boats, is hereby amended so as to permit the Secretary to contract for three submarine boats of the Holland type, similar to the submarine boat Holland, if, in the judgment of the Secretary, this boat is more efficient than the submarine boat Plunger now being constructed for the Department.

Mr. STEWART. The section to be amended reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract for the building of two submarine torpedo boats of the Holland type, at a cost not exceeding $175,000 each; said boats to be constructed and delivered to the Navy Department within four months from the date of contract: Provided, That the Holland boat now being built for the Department shall be accepted by the Department as fulfilling all the requirements of the contract, and as being satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy; but no action shall be taken therein until said Holland boat now being built for the Department shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, and thereupon accepted.

I should like to have read the letter of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to the amendment. The amendment simply enlarges the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 28, 1899.

SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your letter of the 27th instant, inclosing a copy of an "amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. STEWART to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900," I have the honor, in response to your request for the views of the Department with regard to the proposed amendment, to submit the following statement:

Under date of November 4, 1898, the Department appointed a board for the purpose of inspecting the submarine torpedo boat Holland. While the report of the inspection made by the board so appointed was, with respect to many features of the operation of the Holland as a submarine boat, favorable, it was not altogether satisfactory, and the board recommended that a further examination of the qualities of the vessel be made.

The vessel thus inspected and reported upon—the Holland—was built by the company, is, it is understood, a more modern boat than the submarine boat Plunger, and is probably better in all respects. Although smaller, the Holland is less complex in her machinery, and is constructed according to plans involving less expense than those upon which the Plunger was built.

In view of the foregoing, the Department perceives no objection to the adoption of an amendment authorizing the two submarine boats already provided for be made of the Holland type, but is not prepared to say that there are necessary until further trial. It is of the opinion that the conditions respecting the satisfactory construction and performance of the boats embodied in the act of June 10, 1896, should be explicitly prescribed. It is, however, believed that the limit of cost, $175,000 each, as fixed in the original act, should certainly not be exceeded, and that it might in all probability be reduced. It is observed that the amendment contains no specific provision upon the point of cost.

A press copy already in the possession of the Department of the report of the board of inspection, above mentioned, is herewith transmitted for the information of the committee, the copy being transmitted in that form in order to avoid the delay of recopying.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG,

Secretary.

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT LOCKPORT, N. Y., AND NEW BRIGHTON, PA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 500) for the erection of a public building at Lockport, N. Y., which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, temporarily displacing the present measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill, as a new section, the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the borough of New Brighton and State of Pennsylvania, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. QUAY. I move to modify the title so as to correspond with the body of the bill.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the erection of public buildings at Lockport, N. Y., and New Brighton, Pa."

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. QUAY, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. MONEY were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FRYE, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. WHITE were appointed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF STATES FOR WAR EXPENSES.

Mr. WARREN. Thanking the Senator from Maine for yielding, I ask permission to submit a conference report on the bill (S. 5260) to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898.

Mr. HALE. If the report will give rise to any debate, I must insist that it shall lie over. But I will not interpose objection now.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. WARREN. I will say it is about the same as passed by the Senate, but a little more liberal, perhaps, using the text of the House. I think it is well understood, and I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems to me the conference report ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that it was not read. The Secretary stopped reading.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has not been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will be proceeded with.

Mr. HALE. I think it had better go over.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed, so that everybody can read it.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator objects, it will follow that course and be printed. It will take a little time. I feel that it is of more importance than the appropriation bills, because it provides for the settlement of standing claims amounting to some $3,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would rule that the conference report had a right to be read. As to consideration, that is another question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it not entitled to be proceeded with until disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rule the Chair holds that it is a privileged question to be presented and read. Consideration is not privileged.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that he have it printed as a document and call it up later in the afternoon.

Mr. WARREN. There is no necessity to have it printed as a document. It can be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator can have it printed, and perhaps get it through later in the afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the report, unless it be dispensed with, and it will be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have it printed as a document? It will not appear in the RECORD until to-morrow morning, whereas the Senator can have it printed and returned here in two hours.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the suggestion I made, but the Senator did not respond to it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that course may be pursued and that it be printed and returned at the earliest possible hour. Later I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to bring it up, and if I am not here one of my colleagues will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it to be printed as a document or as a bill?

Mr. WARREN. As a bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the order previously made be reconsidered, and that the conference report be printed as a bill. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CARROLLTON, KY.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which has just come from the House of Representatives, providing for a public building at Carrollton, Ky.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not do that. It is very essential that we should get the appropriation bill through, and every interruption makes it liable to be thrown over until to-morrow. I hope the Senator will wait and see if we can not finish the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. I believe everybody has given way to everybody else, and I do not see why an exception should be made in this case. It is the only public building bill in which Kentucky is interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 1663) for the erection of a public building at Carrollton, Ky., which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I must object to any further interruption until the appropriation bill is passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the following amendment to the pending bill.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 61 add:

And in no case shall a contract be made for the construction of the hull of a battle ship or armored cruiser until a contract has been made for the armor for such vessel.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. In line 3, page 30, after the word "dollars," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 30, after the word "dollars," insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure, by purchase, in his discretion, at such price as he may deem fair and reasonable, not to exceed the sum of $25,000, the following described property adjoining and contiguous to the United States Naval Station, Port Royal, S. C., being lots in township No. 2 south of Beaufort base line, range No. 1 west of the St. Helena meridian, in section No. 5, according to the survey thereof made by the United States direct-tax commissioners for South Carolina and recorded in their office, namely: 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, and 64; also section No. 8, lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANNA. By direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I desire to offer an amendment, to come in on page 9, after line 4.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, after line 4, insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase from the Gathmann Torpedo Gun Company, of Chicago, Ill., the gun equipment for one or more of the harbor-defense monitors authorized by the act approved May 4, 1893, such equipment to consist of two guns for each vessel, of not less than 10-inch bore and not less than 40 feet in length, capable of throwing the Gathmann type of shell containing about 500 pounds of wet gun cotton; said guns to cost not more than $32,500 each, and the workmanship and material to be equal to the present standard now used in the Navy, and subject to the usual inspection of the Bureau of Ordnance, and the sum of not exceeding $250,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. HALE. Is that the amendment agreed to by the committee?

Mr. HANNA. Yes, it was agreed to by the committee.

Mr. BACON. I hope that before the amendment is adopted we may have some explanation of the item. As I understand it, it proposes that certain armament shall be purchased from a particular manufacturer.

Mr. HANNA. The amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to substitute this armament in place of the guns usually provided. The purpose of the purchase of it from this particular company is that they are the patentees and the only concern in the United States that can manufacture it.

The decision arrived at by the committee in reporting the amendment favorably is the result of experiments lasting over a year and a half, both by the Navy Department and the War Department. This invention first brought the progressive stage of high explosives to notice in this country.

The cost of one of these guns will not be greatly in excess of the cost of a 12-inch gun firing the ordinary shell that is used in the Navy and that would otherwise be provided for the monitors. About four or five thousand dollars additional will be the expense necessary for these guns.

The effect of this explosive is more than a compensation for the difference in the cost of the guns. Its great destructive power, in my opinion, will revolutionize the offensive and defensive contests now going on between high explosives and protection against them. This question has been before our committee for more than a year, and the amendment is the result of the best judgment of almost every member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it is recommended by that committee unanimously.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether there has ever been any test called for by the Government from this company that has not been met and more than met by the company in doing what it undertook to do?

Mr. BACON. I hope we may be able to hear the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HANNA. Have I answered the question of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator from Illinois to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CULLOM. The inquiry I made was whether or not this company, in every test that has been asked for, has not more than met the expectations of the Government in favor of their device in the trials which have been had?

Mr. HANNA. In reply to that question I will state that the result of all the experiments has more than fulfilled the predictions of the inventor and the expectations of both the War and the Navy Departments.

The firing of high explosives is not a new question. The firing of wet gun cotton has been known for twenty years, but how to fire it safely has been the difficulty which experience and ingenuity have up to within a short time been unable to overcome. The invention of the Gathmann fuse, a mechanical device by which they can use the fulminate of mercury in the firing of dry gun cotton by percussion, is the only safe means to detonate or explode the wet gun cotton, the destructive force of which is beyond the conception almost of those who are unfamiliar with the subject.

The experiments in the Navy Department were commenced under Secretary Herbert; appropriations were made for experiments in the use of this projectile. Those experiments have been carried on by the Navy and by the Army in their respective departments for the last two years.

Mr. BACON. This particular patent?

Mr. HANNA. Yes, sir; this particular patent. The Ordnance Department of both the Army and the Navy admit that this mechanical fuse is the only safe fuse ever invented for the firing of gun cotton. They pronounce it absolutely perfect and absolutely safe. The experiments at Indian Head and at Sandy Hook have verified the predictions of the inventor and have carried this project beyond the experimental stage, so that now the anxiety of the Department is to avail ourselves of the invention and put it into practical use, to a limited extent, in both the Army and the Navy.

The amendment proposes to leave it optional with the Secretary of the Navy. It simply gives him the authority to substitute on the monitors guns constructed for the purpose of firing these high-explosive shells.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator, and I do so solely for information, whether the patent to which he refers is one which is confined to the fuse. Is it a patent on the fuse or on the gun?

Mr. HANNA. On both.

Mr. BACON. One is adapted to the other?

Mr. HANNA. It is on both.

Mr. BACON. Now, one other question. I have only heard the amendment read casually, of course. Does it provide for the substitution of all the armament?

Mr. HANNA. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. Or only a certain proportion of it?

Mr. HANNA. The Senator will remember that the monitors authorized in the act of the last session were four coast-defense monitors of the one-turret type, and an appropriation was made for the armament on those vessels. The amendment proposes to substitute these Gathmann guns for two 12-inch guns in one or two of those monitors, at the option of the Secretary of the Navy. The cost of it will not exceed that of the 12-inch guns more than four or five thousand dollars. Therefore it is not an increased expense except to that amount.

Mr. BACON. The object of my inquiry was not to antagonize the amendment, but I thought it was due to the Senate, in view of the peculiar nature of it and the amount involved, that there should be an explanation of it.

Mr. HANNA. I am very glad to have had an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. BACON. I think I have done the Senator a favor in giving him an opportunity to make his maiden speech in the Senate. I wish to say further that in addition to the explanation which has been so clearly made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, the statement made by him that it is unanimously approved by the Naval Committee would be sufficient to command my support for it, for I have every confidence in that committee, on which I once had the very great pleasure to serve as a member.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McBRIDE. I wish to offer an amendment that has been favorably reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. In view of that favorable report, I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will interpose no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, page 33, add the following:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of naval officers to determine the desirability of locating and constructing a dry dock on the Columbia River, Oregon, and to report such finding to the next session of Congress; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the expenses of said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted, on page 33, after line 2, add:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission to examine and locate a proper site for the establishment of a naval coaling and repair station in California, south of San Francisco, as recommended by the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated for conducting the necessary operations.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] has an amendment like the one which has just gone on the bill. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will yield to him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to give way to any Senator who wishes to introduce amendments about which there is no contest.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 9, page 33, insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of naval officers to determine the desirability of locating and constructing a dry dock of sufficient capacity to take the largest naval ship in the harbor of Key West, Fla., or in the waters about Key West, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the expenses of said board.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 22, after the words "not exceeding," strike out "four hundred and forty-five" and insert "three hundred;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for armor except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $300 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case a price in excess of the price paid to any manufacturer in this country for such armor by any other government.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this question of armor and the proper price to pay for it has been in the Senate and has excited debate every session since I have been a member of this body. We thought we had settled it on two previous occasions, and the Senate did settle it by an overwhelming vote, refusing to pay more than $300 a ton. But last year, when the war fever was on us and we all felt that though the battle ships which were then on the stocks could not be used in that war it was necessary to display a warlike readiness to equip the Navy and to hurry forward as rapidly as possible additional vessels, the Senate agreed to raise the price from $300 a ton to $400 for the seven new vessels ordered last July.

Now we have a proposition sent here from the House to pay $445 a ton, under conditions and limitations which, considering the exposure which has been made on this floor time and again of the robbery of the Government by the armor trust, is to me most astonishing.

In order that this question may be opened up and Senators have the fullest information before they vote, I shall presently send to the desk some communications from the Navy Department addressed to the chairman of the Naval Committee, in which the Secretary presents the views of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance as to the reasons which should influence this body, if it shall be influenced, to go back to the original proposition of the House of Representatives, or rather that of the House committee, to give $545 a ton instead of $445, as proposed in this bill.

Those letters will show, when they are read, that we are informed that if we pay $445 a ton we will not get what we expect to get, because the armor trust, represented in these letters by two communications from the Carnegie Company and from the Bethlehem Iron Works, the only manufacturers of armor in the United States, indicate that they will not sell us the Krupp armor at a less price than the one which was proposed by the House committee—$545 per ton.

I am not proposing to consume the time of the Senate, Mr. President, because I never filibuster without announcing that I am filibustering, and there is nothing in this proposition to make it warrantable on my part to delay the Senate any longer than is necessary to present the facts fully for its consideration and to put them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the use of the country, to let the people see what is being done here, and how these millions and other hundreds of millions of dollars are being squandered if we shall accede to this proposition.

I therefore send to the desk and ask to have read Senate Document No. 141, a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the letters from Captain O'Neil. I should like Senators to send for that document and follow the reading, because if they do not they can not understand just what kind of a steal is on here.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator want to have the full document read?

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to have the full document read. Otherwise there are many Senators here who will not know anything about it. There are a great many who will sit here and not know anything about it after it is read; but I feel that I am in duty bound to give them the opportunity to see whether they will vote for a palpable fraud on the Government and to put the hands of these people into the pockets of the taxpayers of this country or not.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator that it is a very interesting document, but the Senate will be more likely to listen to it if he will read it himself.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, I suggest that my friend from New Hampshire has a magnificent voice and he is very fresh. If he will take the trouble to read it and comment on it, I do not think there will be any need for me to say anything, because to him, if to anyone, is due the credit—and I think it is great credit—that we first struck down these frauds in armor where the Government was robbed. He is the man who introduced the resolution to investigate the cost of armor. He is the man who reported here, after the fullest investigation, that $300 is more than enough. If the Senator will simply elucidate this proposition by reading that document and commenting on it, I think there will be no further need for me to say anything.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am going to vote with the Senator. I am anxious to have this proposition adopted.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will vote to stand by it, of course I am not going to consume the time of the Senate in any further speaking, but let the reading proceed. There are a great many new Senators who have never heard the subject discussed.

Mr. CHANDLER. What amendment has the Senator moved?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have moved to reduce the price of armor to $300 a ton.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am going to vote with the Senator. I am anxious to vote. I think this document should be read by Senators, but I should like to save the time it will take to read it from the desk.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not consent that the document shall not be read, because, if I do, Senators who feel that they must be swept along under party discipline here, or those who vote as a matter of principle or policy with the Committee on Appropriations, will not at all understand the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the paper referred to by the Senator from South Carolina will be read, as requested by him.

The Secretary read as follows:

KRUPP ARMOR FOR BATTLE SHIPS.

February 27, 1899.—Ordered to be printed. Mr. HALE presented the following memorandum and correspondence regarding Krupp armor for battle ships, monitors, etc.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 20, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a memorandum concerning Krupp armor, which may be of use to your committee in considering the question of armor for the battle ships of the Maine class, the four harbor-defense monitors now under contract, and any future armored vessels that may be authorized.

Respectfully,

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Senate Naval Committee.

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 20, 1899.

SIR: On February 2, 1898, in company with the Secretary of the Navy, I appeared before the Senate Naval Committee for the purpose of furnishing information with reference to armor made by the so-called Krupp process, about which several notices have appeared in technical and military journals, and in the daily prints, your committee desiring full information as to whether armor made by such process could be utilized for battle ships Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin.

In my remarks on that occasion I stated that from the best information obtainable it was learned that experimental plates only, made by the Krupp process, had been presented; that up to that time it had not been introduced into service, unless, perhaps, in the exceptional case of the Russian battle ship Poltava, for which Krupp made the armor, which cost $52.64 per ton delivered in St. Petersburg.

Nothing is known as to the ballistic requirements pertaining to that contract, but it is understood that Krupp received this order on account of the good showing of his 11.8-inch trial plate, which was tested at Meppen on September 15, 1895. I further stated to your committee that while the American armor manufacturers had acquired the Krupp process and the right to use it on payment of a sum in the nature of a royalty (which they now claim is $45 per ton), they were then unable to say when they would be able to submit experimental plates for test, and consequently they could not undertake its manufacture, or, in fact, the manufacture of any armor of higher ballistic qualities than the nickel-steel face-hardened armor they were then furnishing the Government.

It therefore became necessary to order for the Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin armor made under practically the same specifications as was that for the two preceding battle ships, namely, the Kearsarge and Kentucky. It may be said, however, as a matter of certainty that the armor contracted for for the five foregoing vessels represented the best state of the art of manufacture at the time the contracts were made, and that its quality is equal to the best supplied by any nation for its contemporaneous vessels.

During the past year the manufacture of armor made by the so-called Krupp process (which is sometimes referred to as the improved Harveyized) has passed the experimental stage and is being manufactured commercially on a large scale abroad and on a moderate scale in the United States. In this country the Carnegie Company presented for test at the naval proving ground at Indian Head in July, 1898, a 6-inch Krupp plate, and in October of the same year a 12-inch plate made by the same process, and while these were its first efforts, and naturally not as good as may be expected when greater experience is had in manufacture, they showed marked qualities of excellence and of superiority to the ordinary face-hardened armor.

In November, 1898, the Bethlehem Company gave a test at its proving ground at Reddington, Pa., of a 6-inch experimental Krupp plate, which was witnessed by an officer from the Bureau of Ordnance. This plate was attacked with 8-inch armor-piercing projectiles, and withstood six shots having a total energy of 30,668 foot-tons, but one of the projectiles getting through the plate and backing, and that one being entirely broken up. This projectile struck with a velocity that should have carried it through 13 inches of wrought iron or through nearly 8 inches of ordinary face-hardened armor. This plate undoubtedly made as good showing as any plate of its size and thickness ever presented for test.

These results were so conclusive that the two American companies referred to announced that they were prepared to manufacture Krupp armor commercially, and would submit such armor to a ballistic test 25 per cent more severe than that now required; and in the latter part of last year they contracted to furnish Krupp armor for a Russian battle ship now being built at the Cramps works in Philadelphia. The tests for this armor are severe, and are to be made at Indian Head by the Navy Department as a matter of courtesy to the Russian Government (which pays all costs of the same).

The peculiar qualities of the Krupp armor are its depth and hardness of face, extreme toughness of back, and immunity from cracks under numerous heavy impacts.

The process of manufacture is not patented, but is a so-called trade secret, though it is not wholly so. The chemical composition of Krupp plates is known to be practically as follows:

	Per cent.
Nickel, not less than.....	3.5
Chromium, not less than.....	1.3
Carbon, not less than.....	.2
Manganese, not more than.....	.4
Copper, not more than.....	.07
Phosphorus, not more than.....	.03
Sulphur, not more than.....	.03
Silica, from.....	.05 to .15

The above formula differs but little from that which governs the manufacture of the ordinary nickel-steel armor as now made, there being a slight difference in the percentage of nickel, namely, 3.5 per cent as against 3.25 per cent now used by us, and the addition of chromium to the extent of 1.3 per cent, which we do not employ. One of the features of chromium is that it possesses the property of keeping carbon in the form of "hardening carbon;" another is that it raises the limit of saturation for carbon, and therefore its presence undoubtedly greatly facilitates the process of carburization, which has to be performed prior to tempering.

The hardening of chromium steel is much more difficult than that of ordinary steel; it is liable to crack during the process, thus necessitating the use of oil as a cooling medium, whereas the ordinary nickel-steel armor is water tempered. The process of carburization, which is accomplished in the Harvey process by charcoal under a high and prolonged heat, is accomplished by means of a hydrocarbon gas in the case of the Krupp plates, and requires furnaces specially adapted for the purpose.

Krupp armor, being excessively tough, requires a longer time in the machine shop to cut and grind its edges to final dimensions and to drill for bolts, etc.

As regards the cost of manufacture, but little can be said except by those engaged in the business. They claim that their output is smaller and that the risks of losses are greater with Krupp than with the ordinary armor, and that they are under agreement to pay $45 per ton as royalty. Both the American armor companies have informed the Bureau of Ordnance, in writing, that the lowest price for which they will undertake the manufacture of Krupp armor is $45 per ton, including royalty. They argue that if $400 (with royalty for face-hardening process) is a fair price per ton for the present quality of armor, $300 per ton is a fair price for armor 25 per cent more resisting in quality, the Government paying the royalty in either case, and that this price is less than they are now receiving for the armor for the Russian battle ship, and is less than is being paid abroad.

So far as concerns the adoption of Krupp armor abroad, I have positive information from one of the largest manufacturers of armor in Great Britain, who has large contracts for the British and foreign governments, that they are making nothing but Krupp armor; and it is understood that in England alone the following vessels are being supplied, or are to be supplied, with this quality of armor: For the British Government, four battle ships, namely, the Vengeance, Canopus, Albion, and Glory; also four armored cruisers. For the Japanese Government, four battle ships and three armored cruisers. In addition to the above the British Admiralty has asked for tenders for battle ships and two large armored cruisers, all of which are to have armor of similar quality. Russia, Germany, and France are also using Krupp armor.

The question is frequently asked whether, because a better quality of armor is used, less in weight will be needed, and the reply is, not to any material extent, because it is recognized that armored vessels should be given the best, that is, the greatest amount of protection which their displacement warrants. A certain percentage of the displacement in all armored vessels is allowed for the weight of hull and machinery, for coal, for equipment, and for armament and ammunition, stores, etc., and for hull and gun protection.

The latter is 25 per cent in the new Maine class—that is, 25 per cent of 12,500 tons, or about 3,125 tons for protection; and while this weight might be considerably reduced and still leave the vessels relatively as well protected as their predecessors having ordinary nickel-steel face-hardened armor, it would not be practicable to make an all-round deduction of 25 per cent in weight, as it would only be practicable to reduce the heavy plates in thickness. The thin plates—that is, those of about 6 inches—would not have sufficient mass to resist a heavy impact, no matter how good they were, if they were materially reduced.

What is expected to be gained by the use of Krupp armor is better protection on the same weight than is now allowed, and by a different distribution of armor to cover a larger area of the vessel, by reducing the thickness of the very heavy belt, diagonal, barbettes, and turret armor and applying the weight thus saved to hitherto unprotected portions of the vessels, and by thickening up those parts which from necessity have heretofore been comparatively lightly protected, namely, the casemates and superstructure, in which the rapid-firing guns are placed.

As regards the price now being paid abroad for Krupp armor, I have positive information from one of the principal British armor-making establishments, which now has large domestic and foreign orders, that they are not selling it to anybody for less than £117 sterling ($598.63) per ton. Whatever the price, the Navy Department can take but one attitude, namely, that the best and only the best armor obtainable should be supplied to United States vessels, and in order that their prestige may be maintained and that they may be in all respects the equals of the ships of war of other nations.

Respectfully,

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Senate Naval Committee.
(Through Office of Assistant Secretary of Navy.)

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 25, 1899.

SIR: In addition to the matter sent you yesterday, with regard to the price of armor plate, I inclose two communications this day received from the Bureau of Ordnance.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG,
Secretary.

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1899.

SIR: As further bearing on the quality of armor manufactured by the Krupp process, as compared with the ordinary nickel-steel, face-hardened armor as now manufactured, the Bureau incloses a table prepared to illustrate the difference between the tests now applied and those that would be applied to Krupp plates, column 7 showing the present required velocity of the projectile on impact, and column 4 the proposed velocities for Krupp plates.

To summarize, it may be briefly stated that the proposed tests for Krupp plates are such as are now applied to plates of 25 per cent greater thickness; that is, the same test will be applied to a 6-inch Krupp plate that is now applied to a plate of 7½ inches in thickness; to an 8-inch Krupp plate that which is now applied to one of 10 inches in thickness; to a 10-inch Krupp plate that which is now applied to one of 12½ inches, and to a 12-inch Krupp plate that which is now applied to one of 15 inches.

It is respectfully suggested that the within information be communicated to the Senate Naval Committee.

Respectfully,

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Column 3 is the velocity for perforation of homogeneous steel by De Marro formula.

Column 4 is the velocity proposed for ballistic test for Krupp armor, uncapped projectiles.

Column 5 is corresponding velocity for capped projectiles.

Column 6 is velocity required for perforation face-hardened armor (Bureau formula).

Column 7 is present high velocity for ballistic acceptance test.

With 6-inch gun the proposed velocity for acceptance test of 6-inch plate is about same as for 7½-inch plate of high velocity shot of present specifications.

With 8-inch gun the proposed velocity for 8-inch plate is the same as for 10-inch plate of present specifications.

With 10-inch gun the proposed velocity for 10-inch plate is the same as for 12½-inch plate, present specifications.

With 12-inch gun proposed velocity for 12-inch plate is same as for 15-inch plate, present specifications.

The 4-inch gun to be used against plates below 5 inches in thickness.

The 5-inch gun against 5-inch plates and below 6 inches.

The 6-inch gun against 6-inch plates and below 8 inches.

The 8-inch gun against 8-inch plates and below 10 inches.

The 10-inch gun against 10-inch plates and below 12 inches.

The 12-inch gun against 12-inch plates and above.

The Bureau reserving the right to use a gun of smaller caliber with correspondingly increased velocity.

The ballistic test to be three shots, with velocities as given in column 5, no shell or part thereof to fall in rear of skin plate and no through crack to develop.

In case of perforation by capped shell, no through cracks developing, uncapped shell shall be used in such number as shall make the number of impacts at least four, the velocity for such uncapped shell being taken from column 4, the acceptance or rejection ballistically of the group of armor represented by the plate being determined by its resistance to such attack under the same conditions as noted above for capped projectiles; each point of impact being at least 3½ calibers from each other point of impact, and at least the same distance from an edge.

The data for the use of capped projectiles are taken only from information derived from the tests of armor treated by the face-hardening process now in use. It is believed, though, that the velocities for heavy armor should be increased, as with a thicker hard face the cap will lose to an extent, the limit of which can be determined only by experiment, its value.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Washington, D. C., January 31, 1899.

SIRS: Referring to Bureau's letter No. 14118, of November 21, 1898, with reference to the price of armor made and treated by the so-called Krupp process, and to a subsequent interview at which this matter was discussed and at which you stated that you considered $545 per ton would be a fair price, but did not state whether that was the lowest price you would accept, the Bureau finds it necessary, in order that correct estimates may be furnished to Congress, to know definitely the lowest sum that will be accepted for the so-called Krupp armor. This matter will soon be under consideration by the Naval Committee, and an early reply is requested.

As the Bureau recalls the interview above referred to, your attitude was that if $400 a ton was a proper price for armor under present contracts, $500 per ton would be a fair price for armor 25 per cent better in quality; and that as the Government now agrees to pay such royalty as has to be paid for the face-hardening process, so it ought to pay the royalty on the Krupp process, if used.

The Bureau does not hesitate to say that it does not regard such reasoning as at all conclusive, and does not think the Department should take any cognizance of the question of royalty in any future armor contracts; and also thinks that $545 per ton is a considerably greater sum than is likely to be authorized.

Respectfully,

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

CARNEGIE STEEL COMPANY, Munhall, Pa.
(Sent also to the Bethlehem Iron Company.)

THE BETHLEHEM IRON COMPANY,
South Bethlehem, Pa., February 3, 1899.

SIR: Answering the Bureau's letter of the 31st ultimo:

The lowest price we are willing to accept for Krupp armor is $545 per ton. We base this price on an average royalty we will be obliged to pay of $45 per ton, and on the fact that so far as our experience goes the additional cost of manufacturing Krupp armor over the cost of manufacturing Harvey armor will not be less than $100 per ton.

As already stated to you in conversation, we would prefer to manufacture Harvey armor at $400 per ton rather than Krupp armor at $545 per ton, not only on account of the increased cost of the latter, but also on account of the increased risk.

Respectfully,

THE BETHLEHEM IRON COMPANY,
ROBT. P. LINDERMAN, President.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

(Through Inspector of Ordnance, The Bethlehem Iron Works, South Bethlehem, Pa.)

THE CARNEGIE STEEL COMPANY, LIMITED,
Pittsburg, Pa., February 4, 1899.

SIRS: We acknowledge the Bureau's letter No. 14118—98 of the 31st ultimo, concerning price of armor manufactured by the Krupp process, and, after most careful consideration, beg to inform you that the price named at the interview referred to therein, i.e., $545 per ton, is the minimum we could accept for this type of armor.

Owing to the great increased cost and difficulties of manufacture and the high rate of royalty required to be paid on this quality of armor, together with our product considerably curtailed in tonnage, with our present equipment, by reason of the above-mentioned difficulties, we consider the price quoted as being fair and equitable, and the lowest we could afford to accept.

We also desire to reiterate our statement that we prefer to manufacture ordinary face-hardened armor at a net price of $400 per ton than Krupp armor at the price given above.

It is not specially desired that the Bureau pay the royalty on armor manufactured by this process, as in the case of ordinary face-hardened armor, the verbal proposition only being made as an alternative one; that is to say, we would accept a price of $500 per ton provided the Bureau would assume the royalty, as in the case of the armor we are manufacturing for $500 per ton.

While it is now considered that Krupp armor is 25 per cent better in quality than the best harveized armor, continued improvement in manufacture will no doubt result in a product still considerably better.

Respectfully,

THE CARNEGIE STEEL COMPANY, LIMITED,
ALEX. R. PEACOCK, First Vice-President.

THE CHIEF OF BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Washington, D. C., February 25, 1899.

SIR: It appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday's date that the naval appropriation bill, as it passed the House of Representatives, contains a provision with reference to the purchase of armor, etc., as follows, under the heading of "Armor and armament":

Insert in line 12, page 61, after the word "dollars," the following: "Provided, That no part of said fund shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $445 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, etc."

The above provision applies to an item of $4,000,000 appropriated for "armor and armament" of certain vessels. As amended the sum of $4,000,000 becomes available for the purchase of armor only, the provision being "that no part of said fund shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality," etc. This would prevent the use of any part of this fund for the purchase of armament—that is, gun forgings and labor and material for making guns, mounts, and other articles of ordnance outfit—for which a part of the $4,000,000 is required.

The paragraph is badly worded, as it was undoubtedly intended to refer to the quality and price of armor rather than to restrict the use of the fund to the purchase of armor alone. It would be better if the phraseology were: "Provided, That no armor shall be purchased from this fund at an average price exceeding $445 per ton," etc.

There is also a degree of ambiguity in the language of the amendment which may lead to great embarrassment hereafter; that is, whether the Department is restricted to procuring armor of the best obtainable quality, or to procuring the best armor that can be obtained for $445 per ton, there being a wide difference between such requirements. The language of the law should be unequivocal, in order that the intention of Congress may be clearly defined.

If the Department is required to supply armor of the best quality and which costs more than $445 per ton, it can not do so, and therefore would not be justified in entering into any contract at all, as it could not, under such restriction, contract for any armor. If, on the other hand, the Department is required to supply armor of the best quality that can be procured for $445 per ton, it can do so; but such armor will be practically the same as is now supplied, and which can be had for $400 per ton (plus royalty of $11.50, if it has to be paid).

The Department has already informed the chairmen of the Senate and House Naval Committees that a better quality of armor than that heretofore supplied can and ought to be procured. The price named for such armor is $545 per ton, including royalty of $45. The accompanying letters from the armor manufacturers are put in evidence as to the cost.

The Bureau is informed to-day by a representative of the Carnegie Steel Company that the price paid by the Cramps for the Krupp armor they have ordered from the American manufacturers to use on the Russian battle ship now building at their works is $575 per ton.

It is most important that by July next the Department shall contract for about 10,000 tons of armor for the battle ships Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, and for the four harbor-defense monitors, as these vessels are now under contract, and unless provision is made at the proper time for their armor it is to be considered whether the shipbuilders will not have grounds for claims arising out of delays due to the nonreceipt of armor. It must not be supposed that the manufacturers are trying to force on the Government the so-called Krupp armor, for such is not the case. They have stated that they prefer to make armor as at present, at present prices, rather than the Krupp armor at proposed prices.

The Bureau of Ordnance desires to be placed on record as recommending to the Department that only the best quality of armor that can be obtained in this country shall be placed on vessels of the United States Navy, regardless of price. To do otherwise will destroy the prestige of our naval vessels, and the Bureau trusts that such steps will be taken by the Department as will absolve it entirely from responsibility in the matter if it is forced to procure armor of a quality inferior to the best that can be manufactured.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. MARTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Gallinger,	Martin,	Sewell,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, there are a few facts brought out in great prominence by these several communications which have just been read, and I ask that Senators shall bear them in mind.

The first is that our own experts at the Navy Department tell us officially that if we want the "best armor obtainable" we can not get it at the rate fixed in the bill—$445 a ton.

The second is that if we pay $445 a ton, the Department will be compelled to give $45 more for the same armor it is now getting under contract at $400 a ton, and that no armor which the Department can obtain for $445 a ton will be better than what we are now getting.

The third is that the Senate on two previous occasions, after a full and exhaustive debate on this subject, decided once by a two-thirds vote and another time with practical unanimity, without the roll being called, that $300 was enough for the armor we now get, and which, judging by the Spanish war, is good enough.

The question then presents itself to the mind of every Senator, and I will ask the representatives of the Appropriations Committee to explain why it is that we are asked to pay $445 for armor which is no better than we are now getting for $400?

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to vote intelligently on this matter, and I want to ask the Senator if the Government has ever procured any armor as low as $300 a ton? What are the facts? I myself do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have never got any armor at $300 a ton for the reason that the two armor factories in this country are in collusion; they have formed a trust; and having a monopoly and with legislation compelling us to buy from them or from nobody, they come to Congress and say, "We will not make armor for that sum, because we intend to make you give us more."

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, one other question. As I remember this matter—I have not taken any special interest in it, and certainly I have not engaged in the debates upon it, but as I remember the matter there was a concern in Chicago, the Illinois Steel Company, which made an offer to furnish armor at $300 a ton. Does the Senator know why the Illinois Steel Company did not do so, or was the opportunity given to it?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will tell the Senator, to the best of my recollection, why. They contended that they could not afford to go to the heavy expense of constructing an armor plant under a small contract, but that if the Government would give them a contract, which would go on for several years, to manufacture from thirty to forty thousand tons in all, they would furnish it at that price.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply want to get light on the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. I now say to the Senator that there is embraced in this very bill appropriations for enough armor, together with the armor for the three battle ships and the four monitors ordered at the last session of Congress, to make up about the number of tons which the Illinois Steel Company proposed to contract for if we would enter into a contract with them on the basis of $300 a ton.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just there, if the Senator will permit me, could the Illinois Steel Company construct its plant and furnish the armor in time?

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator explain what he means by "in time?" Then I may be able to answer his question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess that I do not know exactly when the armor will be required, but I take it that some of it will be required very soon, will it not? If we are going to authorize new battle ships and new cruisers, it can not be a great while before the armor will be needed, can it?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very glad the Senator has presented that question, because it enables me to recall to the minds of Senators the time and the reasons which caused it when we first passed this proposition by a vote of 24 to 12. It was the first time in the history of the Senate, since I have been in it, when we turned down the Appropriations Committee—the great committee which control this body—and gave them to understand that the Senate would not stand responsible for the figures they presented here. We had as the basis of that action the exposure, first, of this monopoly; second, the report of our then Secretary of the Navy that it did not cost $300 a ton to make it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I voted with the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe the Senator from New Hampshire did. I am going to read the list to remind Senators that they were once in favor of honesty and economy in this body, if they are not this afternoon.

I will say further that the Senator's colleague [Mr. CHANDLER], who was instrumental in having the investigation made by the Naval Committee, had figured out that $300 allowed for the cost of the armor and 33 per cent profit. I will state further, for the Senator's benefit, that we had evidence coming before us that when armor was first contracted for in this country the price was put at a high figure for the purpose of enabling large capitalists to invest in an expensive plant—two or three million dollars to start a plant—and that we fixed the price at a rate which would enable them to recoup themselves on the first contract.

So we have bought the plant and paid for it, and have given it to them, and yet they stand and demand that we shall give them as much or more than we did at the beginning. That is the situation.

Like Oliver Twist, their cry is for "more," always "more."

We have provision in this bill, and have already authorized in previous bills, enough armor, at the difference between $445 and the $300 which I propose, to build a plant and equip it and let the Government own its own plant, so that it will have these people at least in a position where they can not say, "You must pay us whatever we demand or you can not build any ships."

We have said so in two votes in the Senate. The only reason why we went to $400, the present contract price, on the vessels now under construction was because the war was on, and it was contended that we could not afford to delay the completion of the Wisconsin and the other two battle ships and the two on the stocks, the Kearsarge and the Kentucky, by haggling over a pittance of a hundred dollars a ton on armor, even if it did involve two or three million dollars of fraud on the Government.

Now, we have this situation: The four monitors ordered and under contract have not had the armor provided for them by any contract.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that a year ago certain Senators in this body charged the Senator from South Carolina and myself with treason because we dared to take enough time to discuss this amendment, saying that in the face of war we ought not to wait one hour to provide armor for those battle ships. Yet those battle ships have not had the armor ordered. The Senate did not want to give us one hour for discussion in the face of the war.

Mr. TILLMAN. I recall the hurry with which the appropriation bill passed last July under the stress of the war feeling which was on us. I myself did not enter into the controversy with the same spirit I do now. But the war is happily ended. We have no use for an army, although we have just provided for 100,000 men. We have no enemies; but still we go on killing people in the East who have, fortunately for them, as expansionists contend, and unfortunately for us, as I believe, fallen under our control.

So far as the word "treason" is concerned, I have just this feeling about it. I do not remember that we were denounced a year ago as being traitors because we presumed to discuss the question of the frauds on the Government, but the word "treason" has become of such common use in this body and in the newspaper press by those who are urging the imperialistic policy and who continue to rob the Treasury, if we stand here and propose to protect it, that I have become accustomed to it and do not care. I rather think it is a badge of honor to be called a traitor now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. When I vote for the Senator's amendment I do not want to be understood as agreeing to his views upon the Philippine question. I hope he will refrain from discussing that matter in this connection.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish I could, but if we have any special use for this great fleet which we are ordering other than to protect those possessions I do not see it myself just now; and under the greatest possible pressure it will be impossible, according to the reports of the Secretary of the Navy, for the vessels already ordered to be completed before 1901, two years and a half and more, nearly three years, while the vessels ordered in this bill can not possibly be laid on the stocks before December next and will not be finished before 1903.

The armor will not be needed until year after next, and I propose, before I get through, to offer an alternative proposition to let the Government establish its own armor plant and make its own armor, and then be able to say to the private corporations which it has built up and made rich, "If you will not sell us armor at a decent price while we let our plant lie idle, we will run our plant and make the armor for ourselves while your plants lie idle."

I have heard Senators this evening and I have heard them before argue that the Government can not profitably carry on any manufacturing processes or compete with private corporations and capital in the manufacture of munitions of war or anything else. But we have in the navy-yard here in Washington a gun factory where we are making the most improved ordnance in the world, equal to that made at Krupp's, or anywhere else, and with it our Navy is armed. It is made under Government control by the Government, and naval officers are in charge of the work.

Why can we not make armor in the same way? Simply because, so far as I can see, these two Pennsylvania corporations have a "pull" at the other end of the Capitol, and they send their bill here for $445 a ton and we do not reduce it. I do not know what the word "pull" means. I see it in the press. Somebody who understands it will please explain it. I do not know whether it is bribery or what it is. It is something that ought not to be used or have any efficacy in the Congress of the United States.

I will call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], as he has seemed to want some light on this question, to another exposure which was brought out in the debate the first time this matter was before the Senate. According to the sworn testimony of the officials of the Carnegie Company, that company had put off on this Government armor that was full of blow holes, armor that was plugged up, armor that was not up to the standard of ballistic tests, armor that was inferior; and we do not know, if we had had a navy pitted against ours that was at all equal in strength and in armament, what would have been the consequences.

Suppose those had been German or English vessels at Santiago, and in anything like equal numbers, confronting ours, would we have had the glory and would this spread-eagle feeling be abroad in this country as it exists to-day? It might or it might not. I for one feel that we ought to have our own armor plant, and if we are not going to have that, then we ought to demand of these people that they shall sell us armor at a fair price, as arrived at by our own experts, or they shall not sell us any. As I said a little while ago—

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me? If so, I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I remember we had a discussion here about the matter of the Government establishing an armor plant, and I think I voted in favor of that proposition, if I had an opportunity.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator had an opportunity, and we lost it by only four votes.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I am not by any means persuaded that we will make armor any cheaper if we have a plant than we can purchase it. The Senator says we are making guns in the Washington Navy-Yard, and that is true.

Mr. TILLMAN. And we are making them at the Watervliet Arsenal, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is the other fact that almost every one of our navy-yards—we have a little one in our State, and it is so there—is idle, and the great private shipyards are busy, because they build ships cheaper than the Government can.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Senator any proof to substantiate that statement?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. He has simply the statement that has floated around in the air, if the Senator will excuse me, sent abroad by interested parties themselves, and sustained on this floor because people advocate the policy that the Government can buy things cheaper than it could make them. This bill is loaded down with expansion in every navy-yard. I am trying to get a little for Port Royal, because if you are going to steal, I want my share, as I have said before.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator did not give me an opportunity to answer the question. He asked me if I had any proof. I have more proof than the vague vaporings or rumors that are floating around. I have statements from naval experts that such is the fact. I have the assurance that it has cost us a great deal more to build ships at navy-yards than it costs at private yards, and I think the record will bear that out. I think the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who must have knowledge on that point, will say that such is the fact.

Mr. HALE. It is undoubtedly true.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is undoubtedly true, the Senator from Maine says.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have great respect for my friend the chairman of the committee, and he is very expert on all naval matters and is very full of facts, but I deny it. I will say that the Texas, the vessel which had a "hoodoo," the one which we all said never would amount to anything, and which the naval people all tabooed, won as much glory in the battle of Santiago as any other vessel except the Oregon and the Brooklyn. She behaved splendidly and is one of our best ships to-day.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be very glad to have any Senator elucidate this question and give us the benefit of anything he wants to say.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina will remember—

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Iowa has the first turn.

Mr. GEAR. The repairs to the Chicago in the navy-yard cost as much as it did to construct the vessel originally.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will explain my understanding of that. The exigency of politics in certain parts of this country required large forces to be kept at the navy-yards doing nothing or at least pretending to work. They must be kept on the rolls. Therefore we build ships and turn around and tear them all to pieces and build them over as we have done in two or three instances.

But the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I believe, poses here and at home and everywhere—that is, if he ever poses; he is a handsome man, and I do not intend discourtesy—as the special champion of labor. He wants to protect American labor against the pauper labor of Europe. Therefore we can not buy our armor in the markets wherever we can get it the cheapest, or anything else. Now, suppose it does cost more to build a vessel in the Government navy-yards than at Cramps' or the Union Iron Works or any other establishment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer the question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through. The Senator must not be so quick on the trigger.

Suppose it does cost more, I say, to build vessels in the Government navy-yards than it does in the private shipyards. Who will get the money? The capitalist? No; the mechanics whose brains and hands fashion the steel and iron into the vessels; and if you are an honest friend of labor, you would say the Government itself should build all its ships, let them cost double or treble what they would cost at a private yard, because the American laborer would get the benefit rather than the American capitalist.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer the Senator on that point, and I will promise him that I will not prolong this discussion by interrupting him further—

Mr. TILLMAN. I enjoy these interruptions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or by asking any further questions. I have never particularly posed as a friend of labor or any other class.

Mr. TILLMAN. I apologize for the word.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that if I had the authority, I would do precisely what he suggests ought to be done, even though it costs 20 per cent more—build the ships in the navy-yards of this Government. I would have them built in navy-yards instead of in private yards. That is what I would have done. But that is not the system which seems to be in vogue. We have our idle navy-yards. There is one in my State. Letters and telegrams are coming to me every hour of every day almost begging me that work shall be sent there. The men are idle. Some of the most expert mechanics in any part of the country are there; and the private yards are busy. That is all I wanted to suggest. I understand that condition to be due to the fact that the Department takes the ground that ships can be built cheaper in private yards than in navy-yards.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator please go further and use his excellent common sense by analyzing that proposition and state how it can possibly be when eight hours is the Government rate both in the navy-yards and in the private yards for Government work?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not undertake to analyze it. I think we have had some very striking object lessons in the city of Washington on the way the Government does work. I do not believe—

Mr. TILLMAN. As chairman of the District of Columbia Committee the Senator is competent, no doubt, to exploit that whole thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not chance to be chairman of the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg pardon. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am on the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is on the committee and knows all about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know something about the Washington post-office, for instance, and I do not think any contractor in South Carolina or New Hampshire would have been guilty of dragging that job along as it has been dragged along here, involving the country in the great expense that has been incurred in constructing that building. That is my opinion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator tell us who the contractor is?

Mr. GALLINGER. I take it that the building was constructed under the direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who is the contractor?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to know whether he lives among these outcasts in the District who can not vote, and who seem to get everything they want, while those who live in the outlying provinces, and who do vote, can not get anything they ought to have.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is Government work. That is all I wanted to say.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would emphasize, before I leave that subject, that if we do pay more in public yards for these things we ought to pay it, because the labor would get it instead of the capital. That is all there is in this proposition; and if you gentlemen are consistent with your professions as to protecting labor and standing up here as its champions you will immediately stop the system of building ships in private yards and have our navy-yards put to work.

We have possibly $75,000,000 invested in docks and various appliances for shipbuilding and ship repairing in the various naval stations and navy-yards of the United States. They are comparatively idle; and I will say to the Senator right here that we have a little orphan of a naval station down in South Carolina for which I am trying to get a few crumbs of this money which is being wasted, for the proper development of that yard.

There is nothing south of the Potomac or Hampton Roads clear around to the Gulf of Mexico except that station, and when the great fleet went to the Gulf and came back with colors flying, needing repairs and wanting the bottoms of the ships cleaned and painted, they went by Port Royal, the only dock in that vicinity that would hold a battle ship, and only sent there some old scows and deadhead boats which were not considered as worth anything until the war broke out. They said, "You have no mechanics there."

That is like my friend the Senator from Kentucky, who the other day wanted us to swim without water. No mechanics to do the work? If you will send us some vessels we will guarantee that the mechanics will come, and as good as you have got anywhere else. But that is all apart from the armor business. I will get back to my mutton.

I wish to repeat what I stated once before, that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who was once Secretary of the Navy, and who, I do not hesitate to say, knows more about the Navy than any man in Washington whom I have met, whether he is a naval officer or not, and farther, as I am in a humor to say something sweet about somebody, having said so much that is bitter, to whom I believe belongs the honor of having been the father or the founder of the new Navy—I say the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], finding and knowing that there were fraud and robbery of the Government in the armor business, brought a resolution in here authorizing and requiring the Naval Committee to investigate it.

We did investigate it fully, and the further we went into it the less we liked it. He has on record a report here in which, after figuring on the most liberal scale, he shows that $300 is ample and more than enough to pay for armor. The Senator, while so sweet and lovable and bright and able, did not always fight it out on that line, but I hope he will stand up to this proposition this afternoon.

When that debate was over and we had exposed the origin of the armor monopoly, proving that the Government had built the armor plants and then given them to these parties, and they continued to ask the same price, showing by the confessions of their own sworn witnesses—nobody else being brought in—that they had put off on us fraudulent armor, blowhole armor, and all that kind of thing, the Senate reduced the rate from the then price of $550 down to $300 by the vote which I will now ask the Secretary to read.

I want to remind Senators, as I have said before, how they did vote on this question once. The question was on the motion to lay on the table an amendment reducing the price to $300.

The Secretary read as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to lay upon the table the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire reducing the price to be paid for armor from $400 to $300 per ton.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 36, not voting 42; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. These amiable gentlemen at Bethlehem, pioneers in armor manufacture, in the letter which has been read, make this confession:

We would prefer to manufacture Harvey armor at $400 a ton rather than Krupp armor at $345.

I should like to remind Senators, who may feel disposed to vote against the reduction from four hundred and forty-five to three hundred dollars, that when we fixed the limit at $300 this monopoly stood out, and for two years we passed successive appropriation bills providing for ships and providing for armor, limiting the price to $300, and these people said, "We will not make you one pound of armor at that price, because we can not."

Then they came forward and proposed to make it for $450. The Senate refused. Finally when the war was on we were appealed to not to let the pitiful sum of $100 a ton stand between us and the completion of the great battle ships, and we went to $400. These people have at last conceded that they can afford to make it at $400. We have their letters on file in which they declared they could not do it. Now they say, "We would rather make the $400 armor than the $445." They are such delightful gentlemen when they want to reach out and get two or three millions more for a contract!

I wish to say that the Naval Committee, which voted to reduce the number of ships to be ordered in this bill, almost unanimously agreed that the reason why it was not necessary to order any ships now was because we could get none built; that all of our private shipyards were fully occupied and had all the work that they could do.

I have a list of the ships that are being constructed at this time and are on the stocks, ordered by previous Congresses. There are eight battle ships of the first class—no; I am mistaken in that statement. There are only five on the stocks, although there are three authorized, making eight in all. The Maine, Missouri, and Ohio have not been contracted for yet, but were ordered last July.

Then there are four monitors for coast defense which have not had the armor ordered for them, but which are on the stocks. Then we have sixteen torpedo-boat destroyers, and we have twenty-five torpedo boats, and then four or five other little vessels, tugs, water boats, etc. In other words, if we sink every vessel that is now afloat which flies the Stars and Stripes, when we have completed the new Navy which we have already authorized we shall have a navy which will be the equal of the one we now have in fighting qualities, though not in numbers.

We propose to increase the Navy still more. I am willing to have and I want a big navy. We need it; but we do not need any big army. But I never want to continue to yield tribute to these armor thieves, these robbers, this monopoly which stands and says, "We have you by the throat; you can not help yourselves. If you do not buy armor from us, you can not build ships. The patriotism of the country demands them, and therefore you will pay our price after a while."

What is the remedy? To fix the limit here back at $300, the original price fixed by the Senate twice on previous occasions; and I have an alternative proposition, if the Senate shall vote that down—to establish an armor factory of our own.

The Senator from New Hampshire to whom I have alluded, the former Secretary of the Navy [Mr. CHANDLER], when I was urging these views last July, said to me, "Who knows whether we are going to build any more ships or not?" I was working for an armor factory then. I said to him, "You know it. Every sensible man knows it." We all know now that we are going to increase the Navy largely, to treble or quadruple its present strength, including vessels already afloat and those already ordered. And are we to continue to have these armor people, these armor thieves, say, "Stand and deliver?" There is only one remedy. We have got to fix the price and give them an alternative proposition that if that price is not accepted and the contract entered into we will build our own factory.

Holding these views, Mr. President, I felt it to be my duty to offer the amendment, and I ask the Senate earnestly to consider it. Let the cost of the factory be what it may, and let the cost of the armor made in it be ever so high, I am in favor of building it. Let us remember the answer of the patriot Pinckney, "Millions for defense; not one cent for tribute."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I will state briefly the reasons why I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The first price the United States paid for armor, when it began to build battle ships, was $600 a ton. Secretary Herbert reduced the price for the Kentucky and the Kearsarge to $550 a ton. That was done at about the time when the Bethlehem Iron Company took a Russian contract amounting to $600,000 at $240 a ton. The investigation into the price of armor was made largely in consequence of that contract at $240 a ton. The contract was made deliberately by the Bethlehem Company with the Russian Government and proclaimed by that company as a great triumph of an American manufacturer.

In connection with the investigation instituted by the Senate Naval Committee an inquiry was made by direction of Congress by the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Herbert. The conclusion he reached after an exhaustive examination at home and abroad was that $400 would be a fair price for armor. The conclusions reached by the Secretary were presented to the Senate Naval Committee, and it was found that after taking about $167.50 as the actual cost of making the armor he added for incidentals and 33½ per cent profit enough to bring the price up to $400 a ton.

The Senate committee reported that a fair price for armor would be between $300 and $400 a ton, without giving the exact figures. An estimate was made by me, as the Senator from South Carolina says, based upon data which had been procured by Secretary Herbert and upon the evidence taken by the Senate committee, which made a fair price, with 25 per cent profit, I think, $300 a ton. After much controversy in the Senate $300 a ton was adopted, and it was adopted in the House as the limit. The result was that the ships were not built.

At the next session of Congress a compromise was effected, and $400 a ton was fixed upon by Congress as the maximum price for armor. That is the existing statutory price to-day.

The Senator from South Carolina has correctly stated the number of battle ships which have been authorized and which are not yet completed. There are eight of them—the Kentucky and Kearsarge, the Alabama, Wisconsin and Illinois, and the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio. The contracts have been made for the armor for the Alabama, the Wisconsin, and the Illinois at $400. They have not been yet made for the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio.

Mr. President, under these circumstances, as it was probable that Congress would authorize the building of more battle ships, three as recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, three as authorized by the present bill coming from the House, and two as it is proposed to amend the bill in the Senate, it would not have been at all feasible for the armor manufacturers to propose a larger price for the same kind of armor that has been used than $400 a ton.

But the armor manufacturers of this country—the two great concerns, the Bethlehem Company and the Carnegie Company—are in combination with each other. They are also in combination with the European manufacturers of armor, and a desperate effort has been made to keep the price of armor up to between $500 and $600 a ton. It would not do to make a combination and continue to demand that price for the same kind of armor, and so the device has been resorted to of proclaiming that there is a better armor; that the United States can not afford to put inferior armor upon its ships, and that the superior armor can not be obtained for less than $540 a ton.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator if there has been any investigation showing that that is the best armor? What evidence exists as to its being the best armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. The whole testimony on the subject, so far as the Senate is concerned, is in Senate Document No. 141, which the Senator can get from the document room, and which has been read to-day in the hearing of the Senate at the request of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. STEWART. That is all the evidence you have on the subject?

Mr. CHANDLER. The whole evidence is there, and it is all summed up in a few words. This new armor that we are called upon to take on the ground that it is a superior armor and pay $545 a ton for instead of $400 a ton is thus spoken of by Captain O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance:

The peculiar qualities of the Krupp armor are its depth and hardness of face, extreme toughness of back, and immunity from cracks under numerous heavy impacts.

The process of manufacture is not patented, but is a so-called trade secret, though it is not wholly so. The chemical composition of Krupp plates is known to be practically as follows:

Then the statement is that there is 3.5 per cent of nickel, 1.3 per cent of chromium and some minor ingredients, which make up the body of the article.

The above formula differs but little from that which governs the manufacture of the ordinary nickel-steel armor as now made, there being a slight difference in the percentage of nickel, namely, 3.5 per cent as against 3.25 per cent now used by us, and the addition of chromium to the extent of 1.3 per cent, which we do not employ.

Now, that is all there is to it. In the absence of more evidence that it is better armor, in the absence of more evidence that it is more expensive armor, I for one decline to be enticed away from the solid basis upon which the Senate has placed itself upon previous occasions to consent to spend several million dollars in purchasing this new armor at an additional cost of $145 a ton.

Mr. President, I must be excused for distrusting the armor manufacturers of this country and of Europe when they demand these prices. It is to be borne in mind that a year ago, when we consented to compromise this question by agreeing to pay $400 a ton for armor, the manufacturers protested that that was a great injustice to them; that they could not make the armor at a profit; that they only consented to do it because of the exigency which was upon the country—three battle ships having been authorized, the hulls contracted for, and no armor authorized or contracted for. And so, reluctantly, they told us they would build armor for these three ships at $400 a ton, but they said there was no profit in it and the idea was distinctly carried that they were building the armor at $400 at a loss.

Now, what do they say, Mr. President, on the sixth page of Document No. 141? Mr. Linderman, president of the Bethlehem Iron Company, says:

The lowest price we are willing to accept for Krupp armor is $545 per ton.

As already stated to you in conversation, we would prefer to manufacture Harvey armor at $400 per ton rather than Krupp armor at $545 per ton.

Mr. Peacock, the first vice-president of the Carnegie Steel Company, informs the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance—that the price named at the interview referred to therein, i. e., $545 per ton, is the minimum we could accept for this type of armor.

We also desire to reiterate our statement that we prefer to manufacture ordinary face-hardened armor at a net price of $400 per ton than Krupp armor at the price given above.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. Either the statements which are now before us are misstatements or they misstated to us a year ago when they told us they could not manufacture armor at $400 a ton at any profit. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was it not the opinion of the Senator, based on the testimony and all the facts available before the committee when we had this matter up, that there was an armor trust in which Krupp and the English manufacturers, the French manufacturers, and the American manufacturers were all combined, and that the entire world stood in such a situation that the nations of the earth were compelled to pay whatever that trust asked?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is right. Secretary Herbert said in his report that in his belief the armor manufacturers of Europe and of this country were in a combination. I think there is no doubt about the fact.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, if that be true, and Krupp is a partner with these men in this new process, supposing that it is an improvement on the harveyized armor, will not Krupp draw his part, aside from the so-called royalty, as a partner in the trust, and are we not asked to contribute to a trust rather than build our own plant and give a profit which, according to the Senator's own liberal figuring, will amount to upward of $100 a ton unless we go back to $300; and he had to strain himself to reach $300 as a limit?

Mr. CHANDLER. Nobody believes that when the Bethlehem Company made a Russian contract for $240 a ton they did not get their money back. I never heard anyone who pretended that they did not get their money back when they made that contract. They claimed that they made no profit. If we yield to the present demands of these armor manufacturers, we shall have to pay, as the Senator from South Carolina has said, $45 a ton royalty. They say that it will cost $100 a ton more to make the Krupp armor than it will cost to make the harveyized armor.

Mr. President, I simply do not believe it, and the reason why I do not believe it is because these gentlemen a year ago told us they could not make this armor at a profit at $400 a ton, and now they say they would rather make that same armor at $400 a ton than to make the new armor at $345 a ton, $45 a ton of which is royalty.

Now, Mr. President, I go right back to the original position assumed by me when the Senate investigated this subject. I believe that there is a fair profit in armor of this kind at $300 a ton, and I am not willing to pay 27 cents a pound for every armor plate that is put upon the sides of our battle ships. With the eight ships which we shall very soon have completed and in commission, I had rather wait with the two new battle ships and the armored cruisers, if necessary, until we can investigate this subject and find out what is a fair price for armor and whether or not we are to be obliged to submit to the demands of this combination of American and foreign manufacturers.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask if he is entirely satisfied that the Krupp armor is any better than the harveyized armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not, Mr. President. I am in doubt on that subject. I think the way to deal with the subject is to fix a price at $300 as the maximum rate. I am prepared to say further that I think, in addition to doing that, we should do what I have never yet voted to do—provide that if we can not get the armor for that price we will establish a Government armor-plate factory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. CHILTON. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 23, page 61, strike out "four hundred and forty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "three hundred."

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to have the full amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the amendment has been reported. It is to strike out "$445" and insert "$300."

Mr. BUTLER. I thought the Senator from South Carolina had presented an alternative proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has not offered that yet.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the Senator from South Carolina has offered an amendment proposing to reduce the price from $445 to $300 a ton, and then has an alternative proposition.

Mr. TILLMAN. My idea was to reduce the price in the pending bill to $300, the same old price we agreed upon once, and in the event the Senate votes that down I am going to offer as an alternative proposition that we shall order an armor plant and simply buy no more armor from these people except what will be necessary to complete the ships which are to be completed between now and the time when our armor factory would make our own armor.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator will remember that the Senate has twice reduced the price of armor from $400 a ton to $300 by a large vote, a vote 36 to 12 on one occasion, and on the other by a majority nearly as large. But what was the result? A year rolled around and no armor had been contracted for, and we were asked to increase the price more than $400 a ton.

Mr. TILLMAN. The trouble was this, that we would always in the mean time order ships and the ships would be put on the stocks, and then some patriot would get up here and say, "We can not afford to present the spectacle to foreign nations of having this great country held up and its vessels on the stocks and be made a laughingstock of because we will not pay $400; in such a case the payment of the pitiable sum of a million dollars to two corporations is not worthy of our consideration."

Mr. BUTLER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that even if we were to adopt this amendment we would a year from to-day be faced with that argument and with a great deal more force than we can be faced with it now, because we have some ships now authorized and others which are being built that will soon need armor. If to-day we adopt the Senator's amendment, one year from to-day there will be more force in the argument that all these vessels are waiting for their armor, and we will be subject to fines for not having them ready and the armor in place. We have made that mistake twice, and I appeal to the Senator not to let us make it again. If the Senator will turn to the RECORD—

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we have not made the mistake, at least the Senator from North Carolina has not made it, because we always said we would never get relief from the armor trust until the Government built its own factory. But the Senate would not agree with us. He and I do not form the Senate. More is the pity sometimes, I think.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Fiftieth Congress, first session, page 2553, he will find that the very Senators who a year before had voted for $300 a ton testified to the mistake that they had made. After the provision for the armor plate was cut out and we had reduced the price to $300 without a provision for an armor plant and we could not get it, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] used the language which I shall read. This is what he said:

Mr. THURSTON. I do not wish to detain the Senate, Mr. President, and I should not speak on this amendment except for the fact that I endeavored to say a word before the last vote was taken.

I wish to make the prediction now that the striking out of the amendment on page 51—

Providing for the building of an armor plant—has undone all the beneficial effects of the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. In my judgment, the striking out of the amendment on page 51 has emasculated the whole provision.

It leaves the country at the mercy of the armor-plate manufacturers, and, in my judgment, with that provision stricken out, the armor-plate manufacturers of this country will refuse to contract at a rate of $300 per ton.

The Senator was right, and events have proved that he was right. If we were to adopt this amendment to-day without coupling with it a proposition that we will build an armor factory if the companies will not contract, then we shall find ourselves in the same fix that we were in one year ago, two years ago, and three years ago.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand that; but, if the Senator will allow me, I will call his attention to the fact that in ten years from now we will be equally at the mercy of these people, although in the meantime we should have built one hundred battle ships and given these people an exorbitant profit—enough to build ten armor factories.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator does not understand what I am driving at. If the Senator will not object to it—

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no objection to the Senator perfecting my amendment; and if he proposes to insert anything in the amendment which will meet the exigency, let us pass upon it and vote upon it.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, which the experience of three successive sessions of Congress has shown to be absolutely necessary for us, to be able to make a contract at all, I offer this amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest that we have a vote on that amendment. If that is voted down I shall lament it very much, but I will then go back to my own amendment, hoping to hold these people up for twelve months, if for no longer.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the Senator that the amendment which I have offered, in addition to providing for $300 a ton, provides further that in the event the companies will not agree to furnish armor of the best quality for $300 a ton then at once the Secretary of the Navy shall proceed, under the plans and specifications which have already been prepared under the direction of Congress, to build an armor plant, not waiting a year for further instructions from Congress. That is what the Senator would desire, I know. I offer the amendment and ask that it be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. MOODY, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11803) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by H. C. Newcomer, captain of engineers, in favor of Stone & Stansell; and

A bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE NORTHWAY.

Mr. FORAKER. A day or two ago I gave notice that on Friday, March 3, I would present resolutions on the death of Hon. STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY, late a Representative from the State of Ohio. I desire, in consideration of the state of business in the Senate, to change that notice, and I will present the resolutions to-morrow, March 2, at some convenient hour.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the bill providing for a national park in the State of Washington, which has passed the House of Representatives with certain amendments, may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2552) to set aside a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park to be known as the Washington National Park; which were, on page 2, line 21, to strike out "Washington" and insert "Mount Ranier;" on page 4, after "States," in line 23, to insert:

Provided, That any settlers on lands in said national park may relinquish their rights thereto and take other public lands in lieu thereof to the same extent and under the same limitations and conditions as are provided by law for forest reserves and national parks.

And to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to set aside a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Mount Ranier National Park."

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the pending question to be on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. HALE. Let that be stated.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the amendment as a substitute to cover the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina and also to cover the question of an armor plant.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 19, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out:

Four million dollars: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for armor except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $445 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case a price in excess of the price paid to any manufacturer in this country, for such armor, by any other government.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Two million seven hundred thousand dollars: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality, at an average cost not exceeding $300 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties. In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to the price above fixed, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized to lease, purchase, or establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor and to proceed to the manufacture of the armor necessary for said battle ships and armored cruisers. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory, and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant, or separately for the land or buildings or the whole or any part of said machinery; and he shall make a contract or contracts for such land, buildings, and machinery with the lowest and best responsible bidders: Provided, however, That he shall not purchase any of the land, buildings, or machinery of the two existing armor-plate factories.

The Secretary shall also appoint an armor factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred. For the establishment of said armor factory the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, and in addition the sum of $2,000,000 is appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used in making the armor for said battle ships at said factory.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the Senator will not do that. I was not through with the discussion of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Had not the Senator yielded the floor?

Mr. BUTLER. I did not suppose that I had. I was still standing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina must answer for himself. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time, and so he does not know whether the Senator from North Carolina had yielded the floor. The Chair understands the Senator to say that he was stopped in the midst of his speech.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator desires to submit remarks to the Senate I do not propose to insist on moving to lay the amendment on the table so as to cut him off. I hope, however, the Senator will bear in mind—I do not propose to discuss the matter—that these are all old questions which the Senate has passed upon heretofore, and that it is at this stage of the business of the Senate essentially important that this bill shall be passed in some form between now and 5 o'clock.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If we do not now appropriate for either armor or vessels, will the Navy of the United States be crippled in the slightest degree? In other words, is there a thing in this bill in regard to armor for the new ships that will possibly be of any use to us until 1902?

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator referring to the provisions in reference to the increase of the Navy?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. If you strike out everything in regard to the increase of the Navy and armor, would it cripple either this country or our Navy?

Mr. HALE. I suppose there would be some delay in the forwardness of getting the new ships into the condition of being contracted for, but I do not suppose that it would be very essential.

Mr. TILLMAN. Could we not wait until December next just as well as now to order the new vessels?

Mr. HALE. The committee has cut down the House proposition very materially as to the number of ships, and I think the Senate is ready to vote for a moderate increase. One of the reasons the committee cut it down was, as the Senator knows, that with all the ships which are now being built it was not essential to carry out the extensive programme of the House of Representatives. Still I think it would be better, and the Senate is probably ready to vote for a moderate increase.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did not the Senator accept the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] that none of these vessels should be contracted for until the armor was contracted for?

Mr. HALE. No; I did not; but the Senate adopted that amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is liable, then, to die in conference?

Mr. HALE. I can not tell the Senator what will die in conference. The Senate will try to do the best it can, through its conferees, to carry out its own action here. I consider myself more bound in conference, if the Senate adopts a provision that I do not agree to, to stand by that than I do as to a proposition which I had agreed to, because I am then representing the Senate in what is in the form of instruction. So far as the conference goes, the Senate conferees will enforce, so far as it is possible to do, what the Senate does in this whole matter.

Every Senator has his views upon this subject, and I am willing to take the action of the Senate. It being so desirable in the present condition of business, with the few remaining days of the session, that the bill should be got through, as it carries the whole support of the Navy upon it, I do not propose to discuss these matters, but simply to ask a vote of the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask a question right in this connection. The Senator is about to move to lay the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina on the table.

Mr. HALE. I have withdrawn that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to say to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that he is now informed that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] was interrupted in his remarks by a request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who asked that the sundry civil appropriation bill should be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I have already stated that I do not propose to enforce the motion to lay the amendment on the table against the Senator from North Carolina if he desires to proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. Of course I appreciate that; but I hold the floor as a matter of right.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire if the committee has altogether abandoned the idea of the Government construction of works for the purpose of manufacturing armor?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it is abandoned by the committee. There are members of the committee who believe in it, but both the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs are against the Government manufacture.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to remark in connection with the subject that it matters not whether it be a good scheme or a bad scheme so much as it matters to have the good opinion of the country. The country believes that the armor monopoly has taken advantage of the situation and is extorting money from the Government. That is the general conviction. I do not suppose you could find 100 men on the outside who are not of that opinion. I think it would be better to sacrifice $1,000,000, $2,000,000, or $5,000,000 in attempting to build Government works to compete with the present armor factories than to have this impression continually upon the minds of the people.

The objection that I hear everywhere against the Navy is to this armor-plate swindle, for it really involves a swindle in the armor-plate manufacturing for the Navy. If anything can be done to remove the impression that there is an armor-plate swindle to which the Government is subjected, that it controls legislation, that it has its own way because it has a monopoly, and that the Government is under the necessity of having this armor, it ought to be done. The country regards this monopoly in the light of a highwayman, with pistol in hand, holding up the Government and ordering it to stand and deliver.

We should make an effort, it seems to me, to build a factory of our own, if we can not do any better, for the purpose of removing an impression which brings the Government into disrepute.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, that is just what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is trying to do.

Mr. BUTLER. Exactly.

Mr. HALE. And I am quite willing to take the sense of the Senate upon the proposition. It is an old matter. We have been over it time and time again. If the Senate decides that it wants now to embark upon the experiment of the Government manufacture of armor plate, I will take my instruction from the Senate's action, and the Senate can settle that question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to vote, if I can get a chance to do so, first, on the price of armor, separate and distinct.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can get that opportunity.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. That was the purpose of my first amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. You do not want to put the cart before the horse.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can get what he desires if the Senator from North Carolina will withdraw his amendment, but he can only get it in that way. If the Senator from North Carolina insists on his amendment, that is first in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall call for a division of the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw his amendment until we can get a vote on the bald proposition as to the price which the Government shall pay, whether $300 or $445 a ton, and then we will take up the alternative proposition of the establishment of an armor factory in the event that the amendment I propose goes through. If the Senator from North Carolina will kindly consent to do that, it will facilitate the passage of the bill, and we shall arrive at some instructions to our conferees as to what the Senate wants them to do.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina, in case the Senate adopts the price of $300 per ton, as it has done twice before, if he does not think it would be necessary to build an armor factory in order to get armor plate at that price?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. BUTLER. If that be so, why shall we divide the question?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, we should divide it for this reason: We are now in a war, and a great many Senators feel that they can not afford to occupy an attitude which will in the slightest degree commit them to a refusal to furnish anything the Navy may want, whether this year or next year or five years hence; whereas by next December we hope we shall be at peace with the Filipinos and everybody else, including ourselves [laughter], and then we can discuss this question as a calm and practical one of business, without any war fever to influence the votes or the action of Senators.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator think that there are Senators who are willing to vote for an armor plant, and yet at the same time are opposed to fixing the price at $300 a ton?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do. It may be that they will deceive themselves, as they have done twice before. It is a postponement of the evil day when we have got to say to these monopolies, "You have got us by the throat, and we will fall down and surrender and let you sell armor to us for a hundred dollars a ton more than it is worth."

Mr. BUTLER. I had not supposed it possible that there was a single Senator who was opposed to the price of $300 a ton who was not also opposed to an armor factory. If there are such Senators and they have such opinions, I have no quarrel with them about how they form such peculiar opinions, but I am perfectly willing, if there are such Senators, and if it will gain another vote for the reduction of the price of armor, to withdraw my amendment temporarily, and let a vote be taken upon the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will be very much obliged to the Senator if he will do that. He can afterwards renew his proposition.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not yet finished my remarks. I temporarily withdrew my amendment at the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] in the hope that we might thereby secure more votes for his amendment, and possibly for both propositions.

As to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, I simply wish to say a word. Senators know—for it has been gone over and it has been proven at every session of the Senate; at any rate, no facts have been introduced to contradict it—that armor can be made for $225 per ton, and that when we pay $300 a ton, we are paying at least $75 a ton profit. That is proven by the reports made by Secretary Herbert; it is proven by two different experts, who were sent to visit these factories and to report upon this subject.

In addition to that, I have this large report in my hand [exhibiting], which shows that the armor we buy from these companies, whether we pay $300 a ton or $600 a ton for it, is defective. I will discuss that on my alternative proposition of a Government armor plant. I think we should have a Government armor plant even if the factories will agree to furnish armor at $300 a ton.

I will withhold any further remarks until after a vote upon the proposition to buy armor at $300 a ton.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], on page 61, line 23, to strike out "$445" and insert "$300" as the cost of armor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He is not present, and I do not know how he would vote. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BACON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY. If my colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] who is absent would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the affirmative). At the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], and will allow my vote to stand as it is recorded.

Mr. TILLMAN. My colleague [Mr. McLAURIN] is absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allen,	Cockrell,	Money,	Thurston,

So the amendment proposed by Mr. TILLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer an amendment to come in at the bottom of page 61.

The SECRETARY. After line 25, page 61, it is proposed to insert:

In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to the price above fixed, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized to establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor, and to proceed to the manufacture of the armor necessary for said battle ships and armored cruisers. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory, and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant or separately for the land or buildings or the whole or any part of said machinery; and he shall make a contract or contracts for such land, buildings, and machinery with the lowest and best responsible bidders: Provided, however, That he shall not purchase any of the land, buildings, or machinery of the two existing armor-plate factories. The Secretary shall also appoint an army factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred. For the establishment of said armor factory the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, and in addition the sum of $2,000,000 is appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used in making the armor for said battle ships at said factory.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senate for a few moments only. I have gathered some facts which I desired to present to the Senate in support of this amendment, but on account of the lateness of the hour and the press of business demanding consideration and action before the adjournment of Congress, I will content myself with a brief statement. The amendment is the same one that I offered a year ago, and which was carefully considered, and was discussed for part of two days in the Senate. I say that much to assure Senators that the amendment is carefully worded and has been closely scrutinized.

In 1897, when I offered this same amendment, just as we were about to take a vote several Senators came to me and suggested that I modify the amendment so as to provide, not for the building of a plant, but for the Secretary of the Navy, in the event that he could not get armor for $300 a ton, to appoint a board to make plans and specifications and estimates of the cost of an armor plant.

That was adopted. The report was made, and here it is. This shows that an armor factory can be built for about $1,000,000. One estimate was as high as a million and a half. Another estimate was as low as $700,000. The Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Herbert, investigated this question, and reported that a complete plant could be built for less than a million and a half. The amendment provides for a million and a half dollars to build it, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and that is the outside limit of what it will cost.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How long will it take?

Mr. BUTLER. We can have a factory built in fifteen months at the outside, I think. Certainly before the vessels that we have now authorized are ready for the armor. The vessels that you have authorized in the pending bill can not be ready for their armor sooner than the Government will be ready to make it. But if we adopt this amendment, we will, no doubt, be able to buy all the armor we want at $300 a ton without building a plant, and we will never get it at that price till we show the trust that we will make our own armor if they will not furnish it at that price.

All of this talk about a new and secret process is all rot. The Krupp armor is no more expensive than the Harvey armor.

I have here copies of the process of making Krupp armor and the Harvey armor. They claim that the Krupp armor is something extraordinary. Anyone who will examine these specifications will find that there is very little difference between them and that one should not cost more than the other. With the permission of the Senate I will put these specifications in the RECORD, so that Senators can see them. Here are a number of illustrations of each process which I will not put into the RECORD, but Senators can examine them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The papers referred to are as follows:

KRUPP PROCESS.

[United States Patent Office. Albert Schmitz and Emil Ehrensberger, of Essen, Germany, assignors to the firm of Fried. Krupp, of same place. Process of manufacturing armor plates. Specification forming part of Letters Patent No. 531178, dated February 12, 1893. Application filed January 24, 1893. Serial No. 456693. (No specimens.) Patented in Germany November 10, 1892, Nos. 72547 and 74242; in France December 9, 1892, No. 236280; in Belgium December 10, 1892, No. 102321; in England December 16, 1892, No. 23228; in Italy December 31, 1892, XXVII, 50130, LXV, 104, and in Spain February 9, 1893, No. 14054.]

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that we, Albert Schmitz and Emil Ehrensberger, subjects of the King of Prussia, residing at Essen, in the Kingdom of Prussia, German Empire, have invented new and useful improvements in processes of and apparatus for or relating to the manufacture of armor plates (for which we have obtained letters patent in Germany, Nos. 72547 and 74242, dated November 10, 1892; in France, No. 236280, dated December 9, 1892; in Belgium, No. 102321, dated December 10, 1892; in Great Britain, No. 23228, dated December 16, 1892; in Spain, No. 14054, dated February 9, 1893; and in Italy, Reg. Gen., Vol. XXVII, No. 50130, Reg. Att. Vol. LXV, No. 104, dated December 31, 1892), of which the following is a specification.

It is known that iron deficient in carbon can be very quickly carburized by passing hydrocarbon gases over the same, and according to our invention we utilize this knowledge as hereinafter described for the purpose of giving a hard surface to one face of otherwise soft armor plates of all kinds.

Our invention will be readily understood from the following description having reference to the accompanying drawings, in which—

Similar letters of reference designate corresponding parts.

The furnace A is heated by gas which enters through the passage a, while the air is supplied through the passage b. The products of combustion escape through two passages c that are situated on either side of the door d. The hearth B of the furnace is capable of being drawn out from the latter, say on rails as shown.

The first plate C to be carburized is laid with the face to be carburized uppermost, upon supports or pillars e on the hearth of the furnace, the said hearth having been drawn out of the said furnace, while a second plate D is laid with the face to be carbonized toward the first plate, and is held at a small distance from the latter by means of intermediate pieces of iron f, stone, or other suitable material. When so placed both plates have walls g g h i built round them, so that the space between the two armor plates is completely closed with the exception of two holes k in the wall h and two larger holes l in the wall i, while the furnace gases can pass freely above and below the exterior surfaces of the respective plates, the gases passing under the plate C through openings m formed in the walls h and i.

After the two plates have been built up in this manner on the hearth, the latter is pushed into the furnace and the latter is heated until the plates are at about the melting temperature of copper, whereupon pipes n and o, the positions of which are indicated at fig. 1, are passed through two openings in the furnace door into holes l in the wall i, and hydrocarbons, illuminating gas, paraffine vapor, petroleum gases, or the like, are passed through said pipes in between the plates.

The surfaces of the plates become carburized by the action of these gases in a comparatively short time, while the used gases, deprived of a large proportion of their carbon, pass through the openings k into the wall h in the furnace and burn there. As soon as the carburization of the plates has reached the desired degree, the hearth is run out and the plates are hardened by dipping into or by spraying the parts to be hardened with water or oil.

The same arrangement as employed, according to our invention, for carburizing with hydrocarbon, may be also employed for carburizing with solid carbon or the like, by merely fitting with the same the space between the two armor plates into which the gas would otherwise enter. The holes k and l, and the supports between the plates, are dispensed with in this case. This method of hardening two plates together with solid carbon is an important improvement on the heretofore usual method of carburizing one plate only at a time.

The faces of the plates exposed to the frame are in both methods preferably protected by a light suitable covering of fire clay or the like.

Having now particularly described and ascertained the nature of our said invention and in what manner the same is to be performed, we declare that what we claim is—

1. The described process of cementation of plates or articles to be carbonized on one side only, said process consisting in forming in a furnace a gas-tight chamber or inclosure, having the surface of the plate to be cemented for a portion of the wall thereof, heating the plate and admitting to said chamber gaseous cementing agents, substantially as set forth.

2. The herein-described process for the manufacture of armor plates, etc., hardened on one side only, consisting in building the same into a furnace with the faces to be hardened opposite to each other and with an intermediate space, heating said plates, then admitting a gaseous hydrocarbon into the inclosed space and discharging the used gases deprived of a large proportion of their carbon.

3. The herein-described process for the manufacture of armor plates, etc., hardened on one side only, consisting in building the same into a furnace with the faces to be hardened opposite to each other and with an intermediate space, heating said plates, then passing a gaseous hydrocarbon into the inclosed space, and finally hardening, substantially as described.

4. The herein-described process for the manufacture of armor plates, etc., hardened on one side only, consisting in building the same into a furnace with the faces to be hardened opposite to each other and with an inclosed intermediate space; heating said plates, then introducing a gaseous hydrocarbon at one side of the intermediate space and discharging it at the other, and finally hardening the carburized side, substantially as described.

5. The herein-described process for the manufacture of armor plates hardened on one side only, consisting in building said plates into a furnace with the faces to be hardened opposite to each other and an intermediate space; heating said plates while in contact with carbonaceous matter filling said intermediate space and then removing the plates from the furnace and hardening.

In testimony whereof we have signed our names to this specification in the presence of two subscribing witnesses.

HARVEY PROCESS.

[United States Patent Office. Hayward A. Harvey, of Orange, N. J., assignor to the Harvey Steel Company, of Newark, N. J. Manufacture of flanged tires for car wheels. Specification forming part of Letters Patent No. 560160, dated May 12, 1896. Application filed October 9, 1893. Serial No. 565160. No specimens.]

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, Hayward A. Harvey, of Orange, N. J., have invented certain improvements in the manufacture of flanged tires for car wheels, of which the following is a specification.

The object of this invention is the production for use on a car or locomotive wheel of a flanged tire, the main body of which is composed of tough metal and is integral with the excessively hard metal upon the face or tread of the tire and with a somewhat less excessively hard metal upon the side of the flange adjacent to the tread.

In the common process of manufacturing car-wheel tires the first step is to cast or forge a steel ingot in the form of a truncated cone, which is technically called a "cheese." The present invention requires that this cheese shall be made of low steel containing not to exceed, say, 0.3 per cent of carbon. In the ordinary process of manufacture the center of the cheese is punched out and the remaining annulus is subjected to the operation of rough rolling, in the course of which the flange is developed.

The present invention requires that the part of the said cheese or annulus which is to form the tread, as the case may be, either before or after the rough-rolling operation, shall be impregnated upon its convex surface to the depth of from 2 to 3 inches with a prescribed additional quantity of carbon, while the part which is to form the flange is impregnated to a less extent.

This is effected by subjecting the cheese or the annulus either before or after it has been rough rolled to intense heat while its convex face is in contact with a granular material rich in carbon, the side of its flange, or of the metal which is to form the side of the flange adjacent to the tread, is in contact with a material lean in carbon, and the remaining portion of the surface of the cheese or annulus is in contact with sand or other noncarbonaceous material, said granular materials being contained in a suitably shaped receptacle, the walls of which are made of fire clay or other refractory substance, and which is arranged within the heating chamber of a suitable furnace.

The period of time required for such impregnation will of course vary with different furnaces and different fuels, and must therefore be determined by previous tests of the particular furnace and the particular fuel employed.

In prior patents granted to Hayward A. Harvey, No. 376194, dated January 10, 1888, and No. 460262, dated September 29, 1891, the intense heat above referred to necessary for supercarburization has been indicated in connection with the treatment of ingots or other bodies of steel, and also in connection with armor plate.

In the first-named patent there is specified a temperature above 1,500° F., and excellent results are stated to be produced by raising the raw steel to a temperature upward of 3,000° F. In the last-named patent a temperature above the melting point of cast iron (1,930° to 2,300° F.), or approximately such heat, is specified. All these temperatures can only be stated approximately, first, because it is difficult to measure the same exactly, and, secondly, because a prolonged heating at a somewhat lower temperature will produce results which are similar to those obtained by a less prolonged heating at more intense temperatures.

The extent of supercarburization effected should be such that the metal upon the surface of the tread will be made to contain at least 0.9 per cent and possibly 1.25 per cent of carbon. If the supercarburization has been performed upon a cheese, the central portion of the cheese will subsequently be punched out in the usual manner. The cheese, or the annulus, may be slowly cooled down and thus annealed in the furnace, but preferably after having cooled down is reheated and carefully annealed preparatory to being rolled and machined to its finished form, and subsequently again reheated in a suitable furnace for the purpose of being hardened.

When its convex surface is observed to have the color which indicates the degree of temperature suitable for hardening steel of the particular quality used, it is chilled by being submerged in or copiously sprayed with a cold chilling liquid. Copious spraying is important where the mass of heated metal is large, and the degree of hardening produced by chilling is to be properly proportioned to the degree of carburization at different depths in the body of the tire. As the main body of the resulting tire is composed of tough metal, any warping which it may acquire during the described treatment can easily be taken out of it by the use of the ordinary appliances for that purpose. If desired, the convex face and flange of the tire can then be finished by grinding.

The accompanying drawings, conventionally representing the heating chamber of a furnace containing the receptacle in which the supercarburizing operation is performed, are as follows, to wit:

Figure 1 represents in central vertical section the cylindrical receptacle B, the interior of which constitutes a cell C of suitable dimensions for conducting the supercarburizing operation upon two cheeses. At the bottom of the cell is a stratum D of sand, upon which is deposited the punched cheese E, the periphery of which is inclosed by an annular mass F of granular carbonaceous material. Preferably a thin stratum F' of mixed sand and granular carbonaceous material is interposed between the stratum D of sand and the annular mass F of carbonaceous material.

The interior E' of the punched cheese is filled with sand, and a stratum D' of sand surmounts the cheese E and the annular mass F of carbonaceous material. An unpunched cheese G rests upon the stratum D' of sand, and has nearly all its periphery inclosed by the annular mass H of granular carbonaceous material. A relatively thin stratum H' of mixed sand and carbonaceous material is arranged above the annular mass H of carbonaceous material, and together with the unpunched cheese G is surmounted by the uppermost stratum D'' of sand, above which is the cover I, made of fire clay or other refractory material.

It will be seen that the portions of the cheese which are ultimately worked into the flange of the tire are those which are in contact with the strata F' and H', which are lean in carbon.

Fig. 2 represents a cylindrical receptacle, B, proportioned with reference to effecting the supercarburization of two such rough-rolled tires as would be made from cheeses of the proportions indicated in fig. 1. In this case the lower tire e is deposited upon the lower stratum d of sand, and its interior e' is filled with sand.

Instead of arranging a stratum of granular material lean in carbon immediately around the flange of the tire c, the tire e is placed flange downward and is embedded into the stratum d of sand to a depth equal to rather more than one-half of the thickness of its flange e'. The remainder of the periphery of the tire is inclosed by the annular mass f of granular carbonaceous material, which, together with the tire, is surmounted by the stratum d' of sand or other noncarbonaceous material.

The tire g, arranged with its flanged side upward, is deposited upon the stratum d' of the sand, and the interior g' of the tire g is also filled with sand. The periphery of the tire g, with the exception of rather more than one-half of its flange g', is inclosed by the annular mass h of granular carbonaceous material, which, together with the tire g, is surmounted by the stratum d'' of sand, above which is the cover i.

The expedient of exposing only portions of the flanges of the tires e and g to contact with the carbonaceous material is to be regarded merely as the alternative of the expedient illustrated in fig. 1, of surrounding the corresponding parts of the cheeses with mixtures of sand and carbonaceous material.

In both cases the object is the same—to wit, to prevent the supercarburization of the flange of the wheel to the extent to which the remainder of the tire is supercarburized, so that the flange will not be impregnated with sufficient carbon to be in danger of being made brittle in a subsequent process of hardening the tire. It is preferred to so conduct the operation of supercarburization that the finished tire will be impregnated upon its face or tread with the added carbon ordinarily to the depth of 1½ inches.

In such case it will be necessary to impregnate the face or tread of the rough-rolled tire to a greater depth—that is, to such greater depth as is inversely proportional to the difference between the diameter of the rough-rolled tire and the diameter of the finished tire. Similarly, if the supercarburizing operation is performed upon the cheese, the depth of impregnation must be still greater.

For example, if the rough-rolled tire is one-quarter less in diameter than the finished tire, then it should be impregnated to a depth of, say, 2½ inches in order that the finished tire produced from it shall have upon its tread or face a depth of impregnation of 1½ inches; or, for example, if the supercarburizing operation is performed upon a cheese the mean diameter of which is one-half that of the finished tire, then the depth of impregnation of the cheese should be twice that required for the finished tire.

It is also to be understood that the supercarburizing operation may, if preferred, be performed upon the finished tire after it has been subjected to the final rolling operation by which it is brought to its ultimate diameter, and in such case the process of supercarburization will be so regulated as to secure in the finished tire the depth of impregnation of added carbon which may be desired.

In conducting the supercarburizing operation upon the finished tire the operation is similar to that described with reference to the treatment of the rough-rolled tire, especially in respect of the fact that the flange is prevented from absorbing too much carbon by protecting the greater portion of it with sand or by inclosing it in a mass of material lean in carbon.

What is claimed as the invention is—

1. The herein-described improvement in the manufacture of flanged tires for car wheels, which consists in constructing such tires from steel low in carbon by the usual methods, and in the course of manufacture impregnating the metal ultimately composing the tread with a prescribed excess of carbon, and in impregnating with a relatively smaller excess of carbon the metal ultimately composing the side of the flange adjacent to the tread, and in finally hardening the tire while it is at a suitable temperature by immersing it in, or spraying it with, a cold chilling liquid.

2. The improvement in the manufacture of flanged tires for car wheels, which consists in subjecting a low steel tire to heat while its face or tread is in contact with a body of powdered charcoal, or other carbonaceous material, and while the side of its flange adjacent to its face or tread is in contact with a body of material comparatively lean in carbon and in subsequently hardening the tire while it is at a suitable temperature by immersing it in, or spraying it with, a cold chilling liquid.

Mr. BUTLER Now, as to the harveyized and the Krupp armor. There is nothing in the bill to provide for better or different armor from that already in use by our Government. The friends of the armor trust will, however, probably try to assume that a more expensive armor will be used. This is a myth, for even should the Krupp process be used, it is no more expensive than ours—the Harvey. The Krupp process is covered by two patents in the United States (No. 503446, October 10, 1893, and No. 534178, February 12, 1895, which I have just put into the RECORD), together covering two and one-half pages of text and one and one-half pages plates, with no specimen submitted in either case.

The Harvey processes are covered by four patents (No. 376194, January 10, 1888; No. 460262, September 29, 1891; No. 498390, May 30, 1893; and No. 560160, May 12, 1896. A copy of the specifications of this last patent I have also put into the RECORD). These patents include 10 pages of text and 4 pages of plates, so that it will be seen that the Harvey process is more complex. The Krupp process is operated by the use of natural gas, or gas which can be produced from gasoline, which is far cheaper than the wood charcoal used in the Harvey process. The Krupp patents also state that their armor can be made by practically the same method as the Harvey process. With the Harvey patents some specimens are exhibited in some cases. The absence of specimens from the Krupp patents weakens their case as to quality. The evidence tends to show from the official records that the Harvey process is better and fully as expensive, so that the claim that the Krupp armor ought to be used or is intended to be used is contrary to fact.

It will also be seen that no satisfactory tests have been made by our Government of the Krupp. (See Senate Document No. 127, Fifth-fifth Congress, second session, pages 13 to 15.) It will be seen they have not been tested with the best American projectiles, but with inferior ones. It was claimed in the House of Representatives that the Krupp process is secret, and presuming this claim would be made here I secured copies of the specifications and have put them in the RECORD. No official information is obtainable, to my knowledge, that the Krupp Company are actually making in a practical way any armor which is equal to ours, excepting it is made by our process.

So far as I can learn, only thin plates—not exceeding 6 inches—have been produced by the so-called Krupp process. This phase of the question is discussed on pages 12 to 18, Document 127, Senate, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session. In short, there is nothing in the claim but a last effort to still further fool Congress and to still further rob the Treasury by furnishing a defective article at a very high price, a quality of armor that we do not want at any price.

One word further. Even if we could buy armor at $300 a ton from this armor trust, it seems to me every American citizen would prefer to see it made in his own factory, where the best material can be gotten without any blowholes or plugging, so that the best armor that could be made would go on our battle ships and armored cruisers. Even if it costs more, we can not afford to have the armor on our ships defective, with blowholes and plugs, so that if a shot from the enemy should strike that spot we would lose several millions of dollars and hundreds of our sailors.

Here is a Government report showing that on a large number of our vessels afloat to-day there are more or less blowholes and plugs in the armor, and we are indebted to either a kind Providence or to the bad marksmanship of the Spanish gunners that no shot hit a plate with a blowhole in it. In the finest vessels we have afloat, as the report shows, there are blowholes and plugs in the armor, and if one of the Spanish shots had hit that spot the battle ship would have gone down in the middle of the engagement at Manila or at Santiago.

Mr. President, we are being robbed by a big trust. We want and must have a big navy. Will we continue to put our country at the mercy of this trust, which not only robs us by charging an exorbitant price, but which is guilty of the most dangerous kind of treason by fraudulently and treacherously palming off on us defective armor? Those who knowingly and willfully support this conspiracy are guilty of treason, if anybody in this country ever has been or is now guilty of treason. We want a big navy, but we want on each ship the best armor that money can buy and that human skill and genius can make. If we make our own armor, it will be the best. National honor and national safety demand it. It is our highest duty to do it. To do it we must adopt this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I wish to enter my protest. I will not undertake to make anything like an elaborate argument, but I am very much opposed to the Government undertaking to build great plants for the manufacture of articles that can be bought of the highest excellence in private factories. The experience of foreign governments has not, as a rule, been favorable to government factories. They can not make them so cheaply. They have never done so. Krupp's establishment is furnishing the guns for Germany. There are other corporations in France; so in Great Britain.

I am very sorry to see the very undemocratic doctrine gaining ground that everything for the Government ought to be done by the Government; that we should set up factories for the manufacture of every article required. It would simply add to the enormous force employed by the Government. It has not been thought desirable heretofore. It has been considered good policy to keep down to the lowest figure the number of men employed and not to enter upon schemes like this. It will cost an enormous sum and will employ a great number of men, and in the end not be as satisfactory.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am in favor of breaking the corner that this monopoly, to speak in common parlance, has on our Navy and on our patriotism. I believe, in common with the great mass of the American people, that they are extorting money unreasonably because they have the power. This Government ought not to be in the power of Carnegie or any other man. It ought to have the power to create its own Navy, and I am satisfied that the country will justify almost any expenditure to free the Government from the rod that this concern holds over it. It is a stand-and-deliver policy. If this concern had treated us right, there would have been two more ships in the late war; and we do not know what they may do in any war. If they do not get their way, they may cripple the Government seriously. Now they have put it to $540. How do you know that they will not go to $1,000? Where will they go? I say freedom from this monopoly at any cost.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I shall not detain the Senate more than a moment. I voted against the amendment to reduce the price to $300, but I did so upon the theory that under the circumstances I thought I was justified in voting for a price that is perhaps higher than it ought to be. Now that that amendment has carried, and if we can not pay more than $300, and we are advised that we can not get any armor plate for $300, I know of no alternative except to provide a plant of our own. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment that is now proposed, on the theory that in no other way is it possible to get the armor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is a question involved in this amendment graver and broader than the question whether or not private individuals shall do the Government work. In fact, that question need not be involved, and yet we would be justified in passing this amendment. The theory of our civilization is competition, but where competition is destroyed the argument in favor of the individual doing the Government work disappears. We have in this case two armor factories in the United States which are in combination, admitted by them, denied by nobody, and together they divide the amount of plates to be manufactured, together they agree upon the price they will charge the Government. They do not undertake to say or to pretend to claim that they are doing the work at the lowest possible cost. They simply say, "We will fix such a price, and you must pay it."

If the armor plate to be manufactured should cost the Government in a Government plant twice what we are paying these people, it would be our duty to establish the plant and disapprove this method of combination. If we approve of it, if with our eyes open we continue to patronize these people, then every man who votes for it votes to approve of the policy of trusts and combinations in this country. They have already reached alarming proportions.

To such an extent have they developed that to-day they menace our institutions and threaten the very life of the Republic. Are we, then, under these circumstances, going to vote with our eyes open to encourage this sort of combination and admit that we are powerless? Then we might as well abandon the idea that we propose to continue to be a Republic and surrender to the forces of plutocracy and combination. These are the reasons why I shall vote for the amendment. I think the work ought to be pushed right along and the plant ought to be built.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senate has had this project before it repeatedly. It has always voted it down. In the mind of every thoughtful man there has been objection to any more great governmental establishments. The construction of the Navy has gone on almost entirely in the works, yards, and places outside of Government establishments. It has gone on cheaper, it has gone on more economically, it has gone on without scandal, all of which will be involved when we create an immense governmental establishment for the manufacture of this armor.

The opinion of the Senate has been so decided in this matter that I do not care to discuss it longer. I am willing to take the action of the Senate upon this proposition, that at this day, after having gone on as we have, we are to build an immense governmental affair to do this work. I have no fear that Senators will do it. Instead of it costing a million and a half, it will cost every dollar of ten million before it is done. It will linger and hang along as Government work does, and in the meantime we will be bound hand and foot and will do nothing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. I think I am justified in releasing the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] from his pair. I have had no conversation with my colleague, but I feel very sure he would vote with the committee. I will take the responsibility of saying so.

Mr. CLAY. Under the circumstances, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. If I were not paired, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that we transfer our pairs.

Mr. FAULKNER. Very well. I vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SULLIVAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. As he is absent and I do not know how he would vote, I will withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], but I have transferred that pair as before, to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 89, nays 27; as follows:

So the amendment proposed by Mr. BUTLER was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now let us finish the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to object to one of the amendments. We adopted an amendment which provides for the purchase of some Gathmann guns. I want that amendment reported. It seems to me that it is unnecessary and we ought not to adopt it; and I think the Senate will agree with me when the facts are known.

Mr. HALE. That amendment was adopted after discussion.

Mr. BACON. I was about to make a motion to reconsider the amendment. I do not know whether the Senator from South Dakota was in the Chamber or not when I asked the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] to explain it. He made a statement to the Senate and I withdrew my opposition to the amendment on that account. Since then I have been furnished with a report made by Capt. Charles O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, in which I think it is very clearly demonstrated that this is not a proper appropriation. That is the matter to which the Senator from South Dakota is now referring.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say that in the fortifications bill, which passed the House and has been reported favorably to the Senate, there is a provision for the construction of one 18-inch Gathmann gun, $65,000, and $10,000 for powder and projectiles for testing the 18-inch Gathmann gun. The report of the Ordnance Department is to the effect that these guns are experimental; that the tests made more often failed than they were successful, and that the invention has not passed beyond the experimental stage. We appropriate enough for this experiment in the fortifications bill, and therefore it ought not to be in this bill. That is the point I make.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator calls for a separate vote on that amendment, let us have a separate vote at once.

Mr. BACON. That is what I want, and that is why I was about to ask for a reconsideration.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not need to do that. He can have a separate vote on the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I will postpone the vote, then, if need be; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to what is found in this report, because I may not be able to be present at that time. I will detain the Senate but a very short time.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator reserves that amendment, we can take a vote on it at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the amendment which has been reserved for a separate vote.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment which has been reserved will be stated, so that a vote may be taken upon concurring in it.

The SECRETARY. After line 4, page 9 of the bill, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase from the Gathmann Torpedo Gun Company, of Chicago, Ill., the gun equipment for one or more of the harbor-defense monitors authorized by the act approved May 4, 1898, such equipment to consist of two guns for each vessel, of not less than 16-inch bore and not less than 40 feet in length, capable of throwing the Gathmann type of shell containing about 500 pounds of wet gun cotton; said guns to cost not more than $62,500 each, and the workmanship and material to be equal to the present standard now used in the Navy, and subject to the usual inspection of the Bureau of Ordnance, and the sum of not exceeding $250,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. HALE. Now let us have a vote on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We can vote on it now.

Mr. HALE. The vote is right before us.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the attention of the Senate for just a moment, while I state the reasons why the amendment ought not to be adopted.

The committee has been furnished with a report from Capt. Charles O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, under date of February 13, 1899, so that this is the most recent investigation. I would be very glad if the entire report could be read to the Senate; but that is not practicable, in view of the necessity for economy of time, and I simply want to read two or three extracts from the report.

Captain O'Neil discusses the whole question. He describes each and every experiment and the result of it. He shows that it is an absolutely immature project; that the experiments have shown that it fails as often as it succeeds, and that it not only fails to accomplish its purpose, but that it endangers the gun and absolutely endangers the ship upon which it is used. There has already been spent by the United States Government $50,000 in experimenting upon the use of this particular invention. While the appropriation, as stated in this report, was of a general character, this officer says that it was understood that it was to be used for this particular invention and for this particular explosive. His conclusion, after going through and discussing the whole question, is as follows:

Therefore I am of the opinion that before we embark in so perilous and uncertain an enterprise exhaustive trials should be made on shore to demonstrate the safety, accuracy, and efficiency of any weapon it is proposed to use afloat.

Now, Mr. President, this particular amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio is not only one which proposes that the Government shall invest $250,000 in the purchase of guns in a matter which may prove to be utterly abortive, but it is proposed by the amendment to locate them on the gunboats which are now in process of construction. Here is the report of the Chief of Ordnance of the Navy Department advising against it, not only on the ground that it may prove to be a failure, but that it will be an absolute danger to the ships upon which the guns shall be placed.

Of course, as I said, there is a great deal in the report that I could go through with which I think absolutely demonstrates the impropriety of it, but I will not detain the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I think it is fair to presume that it was not within the knowledge of most Senators that we provide for an experiment with these guns in the fortifications bill, where there is an appropriation of $65,000 for the construction of one 18-inch Gathmann gun and then $10,000 for the material for making the experiment. I presume the amendment would not have been offered by the Senator from Ohio if he had been aware of this fact. I am not sure that he was not aware of it. It seems to me that provision covers the whole ground as far as we can go this year. If it is a good thing, next year we can buy the patent. We have a chance to experiment under the fortifications bill, which was reported favorably to the Senate after having passed the House.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I was fully aware of that appropriation in the fortifications bill and of the purpose of it. I want to reiterate the statement I made when I offered the amendment, that as far as this explosive is concerned, it has passed the experimental stage. That statement can be substantiated by a number of the officers of both the Army and the Navy who have had charge of and superintended these experiments.

It has the approval of Admiral Sampson, one of the best experts in the Navy on matters relating to the use of explosives; of Major Heath, of the Army, who has charge of the experiments at Sandy Hook and who made the experiments there with this shell; of Commander Hall, who superintended and had charge of the experiments at Indian Head made under the supervision of Secretary Herbert, who was the first Secretary of the Navy who from his knowledge and investigation upon this subject undertook to enlist the interests of the Government to prosecute the experiment.

I repeat that this, as far as the analysis is concerned, has passed the experimental stage by more than a dozen experiments, the results of which have been before the Committee on Naval Affairs and have been thoroughly considered and thoroughly investigated. We have had before that committee several experts of the Navy, one within the last week, Mr. Dashiell, assistant naval constructor, who was fully posted about all the experiments made in the Navy.

He knows all about them, and he gave his testimony, which is in writing and with the secretary of the committee to-day, to the effect that he believes this Gathmann shell is the beginning of a revolution in high explosives which will bring all the nations of the world to a realization of the offensive and defensive contest that is now going on between an explosive and resistance to it by the very armor plate we have been talking about to-day.

The United States Government have been fortunate to be the scene of action and to take advantage of the inventive genius of a man who has made a life study of this subject, who has known for twenty years, from the incipency of it, all about the manufacture of gun cotton and the wonderful results produced from its explosion. Every nation on the globe has been striving during all that time to find a practical method for using this high explosive. This man, Gathmann, after twelve years of constant study, has devised a fuse which makes it entirely safe, and that is verified by the Army and Navy experts, with this one exception.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] makes the statement that in nearly every instance these experiments have been failures. In not one instance have they been failures, save in one of the experiments at Indian Head, when by the advice of a naval officer a change was made in the fuse, and the result was that it burst the gun. That was two years ago. Since that time there has not been a single failure. Every experiment made has been better than the preceding and has more than filled the expectation of the inventor.

Now, my interest in this matter is only to see the United States in the foreground in these experiments in which, under the present conditions, the Government is leading. We are leading the world in our munition and armament, in our Navy and Army. I want to see the Government go forward in that direction. We are appropriating millions of dollars for building fortifications and battle ships, and I want to state my honest opinion from a very careful study of more than one year upon this subject that one of those Gathmann shells against a war ship will sink any war ship in the world. One of the Gathmann shells would blow this Capitol into atoms.

The cost of this gun is only three or four thousand dollars more than that of the 12-inch gun, of which we are building hundreds for our Navy and coast fortifications. Why should we hesitate to avail ourselves of the ingenuity of this inventor? It is not going to cost the Government more than two or three thousand dollars extra to place the gun on one of these vessels. Why should not the Navy have the opportunity to avail themselves, just as the Army have availed themselves, of these experiments?

This amendment was not intended to direct the Secretary of the Navy to do anything, but to authorize him to do it. If before these vessels are constructed and armored he shall be convinced that Captain O'Neil or any other captain is wrong and others are right, and that the experiment has verified the claims of the invention, I want the Secretary of the Navy to have the power and the right to put these shells on every vessel.

Mr. President, there is not a vessel in the United States Navy to-day that is not carrying the Whitehead torpedo on its deck. If it is dangerous to have a Gathmann shell on a naval vessel, it would be equally dangerous to carry a Whitehead torpedo. The whole secret of the safety of this thing lies in the fact that the mechanical fuse, which is part of it, makes it absolutely impossible for the gun cotton to explode except by the fulminate of mercury and dry gun cotton.

Mr. President, I was fully aware of the opposition to this invention. This is not the first time I have heard of it. But the faith that I have had in it and the faith that the members of our committee have had in it was such that after thorough investigation several members of the committee visited the scene of these experiments and satisfied themselves upon this point. After a calm and deliberate investigation and consideration of the subject, the committee recommend that the Secretary of the Navy shall have the right to avail himself of this great improvement, which, I will repeat, can not help but revolutionize the present system.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Do I understand him to say that this amendment is not mandatory upon the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. HANNA. Not at all.

Mr. GRAY. And that it merely authorizes the Secretary to use the money for the purpose of experimentation?

Mr. HANNA. That is all.

Mr. STEWART. Let me suggest an amendment, to insert after the word "authorized" the words "in his discretion;" so that it will be left with the Secretary of the Navy to determine whether or not the experiments shall be made.

Mr. HANNA. I accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] apparently speaks from personal knowledge. I have none whatever. The Senator says he has heard before of this objection; that this is not the first time he has heard it. So far as I am concerned, it is the first time I have heard of the Gathmann gun, one way or the other. So I can not be presumed to have any prejudice in regard to it.

When the Senator offered his amendment, it struck me as being rather a peculiar one, and I asked him to give some explanation of it, which he very kindly did. In that explanation I understood the Senator to say—I may do him an injustice—that this project had the indorsement and approval of the Army and Navy officers, that the experiments which had been made by the Government demonstrated the efficiency of this thing, and that we were on the eve of a great revolution in the war between projectiles and resisting fortifications or battle ships, or whatever they might be.

I understood the Senator further to say that the proposition had the unanimous approval of the members of the Naval Committee; and therefore I withdrew any further objection with reference to it. Under the approval of the Department of the Navy and of the War Department and under the approval of the committee, I supposed it would be perfectly safe to let the matter go. Since that time, however, I find that I must have been mistaken in my understanding of the Senator as to the fact that the proposition had the unanimous approval of the committee. I understand that, while there is no minority report, there are members of the committee who do not agree to it, and therefore I have not the same disposition—

Mr. HANNA. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HANNA. I wish he would name the members of the committee who are not in favor of it.

Mr. BACON. The members of the committee are present, and I prefer that they themselves should speak.

Mr. HANNA. The amendment is on file with the indorsement of every member of the committee.

Mr. BACON. That may be, but, as I say, Senators, members of that committee, who do not give it their personal approval are within the sound of my voice, and I prefer that they themselves should indicate the facts that the Senator desires to have developed.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator is referring to what I said to him.

Mr. BACON. Yes, among others.

Mr. HALE. For one, I do not want any misunderstanding as to my position. I was not present at the examination in this case by the Naval Committee. I had read Captain O'Neil's letter, and that letter convinced me that I did not know enough about this matter to oppose or sustain it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am another member of the committee who was not present when this examination was made, and I know nothing about the matter. I consented, I think, to have the amendment reported by the Naval Committee, relying upon my colleagues upon that committee, as we have usually not reported anything that was not just and proper.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, of course it is not my object to put members of the committee on the witness stand.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has done that precisely.

Mr. BACON. In what way? I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I say the Senator has by what he has said called upon members of the committee to state their individual positions.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it was not a voluntary matter on my part. I made a statement, which the Senator from Ohio challenged, and it was not for me to name Senators in the Chamber. I was about to say that I am not accusing the Senator from Ohio of any intentional misrepresentation in regard to the matter. I said I presumed I had misunderstood him; that he meant that the report came here as a unanimous report, not that it received the support of each and every member of the committee. I do not think there is any impropriety in my statement. Certainly, I did not intend any such.

But what I was going to say is that while I have had no personal knowledge in regard to this matter, I have in my hand the report of the Chief of Ordnance of the Navy Department, in which he very clearly gives his disapprobation to the proposition to use this gun and this particular explosive. I do not know whether his report was called for by the Naval Committee or not. I simply have here his letter transmitting it. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1899.

SIR: As I understand that your committee proposes to give a hearing for the purpose of considering the merits of the so-called Gathmann system of throwing high explosives and for its use on the new coast-defense monitors, I inclose a memorandum on the subject, which expresses the views of this Bureau, and which may be of interest to the committee.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES O'NEIL,
Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Senate Naval Committee, Washington, D. C.

I can not take the time to read all of his memorandum, although every line of it would be instructive. I have no desire to submit any argument with reference to this matter. I simply desire to submit the opinion of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. He says:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I take it for granted that this committee desires such information as will enable it to pass an intelligent judgment as to the merits of the devices and system of the Gathmann Torpedo Company for throwing high explosives, with special reference to their adaptability, or otherwise, for use in the Navy; and in this connection I beg to state that I have no preference or prejudice for or against any particular system or method, being concerned simply for the welfare of the Navy in general and for the branch of the service I represent in particular.

I am anxious that our Navy should possess the most powerful and efficient guns that can be used to advantage and with safety to ourselves, and that can inflict the greatest amount of damage upon our enemies in time of battle, and, to this end, have within the past few months had new designs made for guns of all calibers, calculated to place our naval artillery in the front rank and equal to any in the world; but these are not guns for firing high explosives.

I read that for the purpose of showing that this officer approaches this subject in a thoroughly impartial spirit, and with no other desire except to promote the public good. I can not, as I said, take the time to read it all; it is a pamphlet of 9 pages. I can only read some extracts from it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator please read from page 7?

Mr. BACON. I have several places marked from which I am going to read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator will find the result of some experiments stated there.

Mr. BACON. They are stated in several places.

Mr. CAFFERY. Before the Senator reads further, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. If the amendment of the Senator from Ohio only looks to giving authority and is not a direction to the Secretary of the Navy to try this explosive, what harm is there in the amendment?

Mr. BACON. I will answer the Senator a little later if he will pardon me for the present.

I want to show, Mr. President, that my objection to this matter is well founded. The Chief of the Bureau says, on page 7:

On July 5, 1898—

I ask the attention of Senators to this statement, in order that they may determine whether or not it is a fact that this thing has the approval of the War and Navy Departments—

On July 5, 1898, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy recommended to the Secretary of the Navy that a joint board of Army and naval officers be ordered "to consider the question of firing projectiles charged with high explosives from the guns of the military service of the United States." The Gathmann Torpedo Company requested to be heard by this board and were accorded the opportunity, and in making its report, on July 14, 1898, the board concludes with the following remark:

This board, I beg the Senate to remember, was a joint board of Army and Navy officers. After this Gathmann Company had submitted its project, and after having this examination from this joint board, the board concludes its report as follows:

It is considered proper and pertinent to record its [the board's] opinion that the Gathmann system, if successful, would have a limited field of action as compared with modern ordnance, and the tests thus far made with this system have not shown results that warrant any further expenditure by the Government in its development.

After this, in October, 1898—

A very recent date—

at the request of the parties interested in this scheme, two naval officers of marked ability were directed by the Secretary of the Navy to visit Sandy Hook to investigate the extent of success that had attended the Gathmann experiments. These officers reported to the Secretary of the Navy, under date of November 4, 1898, the result of their investigations, and conclude as follows:

"We are therefore of the opinion that the Gathmann shell is not sufficiently developed to justify its adoption by the Government."

Mr. President, this officer not only cites the reports of these two distinguished boards, but he goes on and gives detailed accounts—a half dozen of them—of the various experiments which have been made with this particular gun and projectile, in no single one of which was there a decided success, in a large majority of which there was a very great failure, and in all of which this officer says that the same results would have been much better accomplished by the ordinary powder-exploding projectiles.

In the course of this report, on page 5, he uses this language:

The only thing I can see now to which the Gathmann Torpedo Company has any legitimate claim is the safety device for containing a detonator and primer and a new shape of shell, which may turn out to be a good thing, or otherwise.

I have yet to learn of any official approval of any of the Gathmann devices of the kind now under consideration for service use, and I am of the opinion that nothing has been developed by them which is of practical value for naval purposes.

I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to the use of high explosives for naval purposes, but I do not think we have yet reached a point in the development of the art which warrants our proceeding to do so without the utmost caution and much further investigation of the subject.

As regards the adoption of the 15-inch Gathmann gun and projectiles for the harbor-defense monitors now under construction—

The very thing which this amendment authorizes—

I am constrained to say that such a scheme does not meet with my approval, because it would, in my opinion, be an unwarrantable proceeding to introduce into the service, without the most exhaustive and conclusive tests, a new type of gun and projectiles differing so radically in character from those now in use and which are so thoroughly understood. In the first place, special guns designed for a particular use are not likely to be as useful as those intended to meet the ordinary requirements of the service.

Secondly, no new type of gun or shell should be put in service until after an exhaustive test at the proving ground, nor is it safe to say that experiments safely conducted on a small or even on a large scale can be as safely done on a much larger scale.

Therefore I am of the opinion that before we embark in so perilous and uncertain an enterprise exhaustive trials should be made on shore to demonstrate the safety, accuracy, and efficiency of any weapon it is proposed to use afloat.

Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] has made an inquiry of me, which I now will answer. I should not have detained the Senate after the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] but for the very emphatic assertion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], which seemed to indicate that the statements made by me were utterly without foundation, and, therefore, I was bound to present to the Senate the high authority upon which I based those statements.

I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, and do not propose to move to strike it out. If, with the information which this officer of the Navy Department gives to the Secretary of the Navy, he stills thinks it is well to continue the experiment, then the responsibility will rest upon him.

Mr. HANNA. Just one word, Mr. President. I still think, as I thought in the beginning when I introduced the amendment, that this experiment was well worth being made by this Government.

I want to refer once more to the action of the Naval Committee. In my first statement to-day I said that this amendment had the support of nearly every member of that committee. The amendment is on file at the desk, with the indorsement of every member of the committee except the chairman, who was not present at the time the investigation was had. Of course if I could have known that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] or any other Senator would bring in statements of the character which have been presented here, I could have produced evidence in reply which I am sure would overwhelm and overcome any statement which has been made on the other side.

The experiments which were made at Sandy Hook have, without a single exception, been eminently successful—every one of them. If the officer who makes the statement that he does not think this shell or this gun has gone far enough beyond the experimental stage to be practically used could have had his way it would not go any further, and, indeed, it would not have gone so far as it has. I know all that.

I again repeat that every statement I have made can be verified by the facts which have been before the Naval Committee. However, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to abide by the vote of the Senate upon this proposition.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to make a single observation. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio should be adopted. When we examine carefully and ascertain that we are to have "two guns for each vessel of not less than 16-inch bore and not less than 40 feet in length, capable of throwing the Gathmann type of shell containing about 500 pounds of wet gun cotton," it seems to me obvious that we should not linger in disputation. If we are to be able to kill men by the thousand, why should we not adopt this amendment? If this is in furtherance of assimilation or annihilation, it certainly accords with our present policy. I am enthusiastically in favor of the amendment, and trust it may eventuate in the fondest aspirations of the Senator from Ohio. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. DANIEL. On page 40, line 10, I move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert "forty."

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 40, it is proposed to strike out "thirty," before "five," and insert "forty;" so as to read:

The age limit may be increased to 45 years.

Mr. DANIEL. I will state the object of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. I want to state the object of it.

Mr. President, the clause to which this amendment refers is as follows:

The active list of passed assistant and assistant paymasters of the Pay Corps shall hereafter consist of 30 and 40, respectively: Provided, That when such appointments of assistant paymasters are made from among those who served honorably in the late war with Spain the age limit may be increased to 35 years.

The object of the amendment is to increase it to 45 years. I do not think it wise, Mr. President, to hamper and restrict the President of the United States in his selection of these officers to such a degree that he must necessarily consider as disfranchised and ineligible those men who have reached the maturity of their faculties and who are just at that stage of life in which they are prepared to render the Government the most efficient and experienced service. Scarcely any distinguished officer of the United States Army or Navy in the recent war with Spain, though he might come back to this country with honors thick upon him, would be eligible under this provision to be appointed as paymaster in the Navy.

Mr. HALE. If we can have a vote, I shall be very glad.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the paragraph read, so as to show the connection.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the paragraph will read as follows:

The active list of passed assistant and assistant paymasters of the Pay Corps shall hereafter consist of 30 and 40, respectively: Provided, That when such appointments of assistant paymasters are made from among those who served honorably in the late war with Spain the age limit may be increased to 45 years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to me there ought to be no limit. Leave the discretion open. I know a most excellent man who served as assistant paymaster and who is 54. I do not believe he should be shut off. He was in Cuban waters all during the difficulty.

Mr. HALE. Why not go a little further and not have any paymasters?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am not sure but that would be a good plan. If the Senator from Maine will offer the amendment, I will vote for it. I move to amend by changing the age limit to 55 instead of 45 wherever they served in the war with Spain.

Mr. HALE. The Senator had better put it at 65.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will not object to that. I think there should be no limit where they served in the war with Spain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the clause as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the clause by striking out "forty-five" and inserting "fifty-five;" so as to read "fifty-five years."

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President—

Mr. HALE. There was a special order for 5 o'clock, and we have already exceeded the time by three-quarters of an hour. The Senator from Arkansas will see clearly I can not yield.

Mr. BERRY. It is a very small matter. A bill came up this morning which occupies a peculiar relation, and I have been waiting here the entire day to have it corrected, and I should like very much to do so.

Mr. HALE. We can take it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be very glad to be present when the Senate convenes to-morrow morning, and I think the matter can be disposed of in five or ten minutes.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at half past 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF LORD HERSCHELL.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I rise to announce the death of Lord Herschell in this city at 7 o'clock this morning. Lord Herschell was born in England sixty-two years ago, and had a most illustrious and honorable career. He was called to the bar in 1860, and became Queen's counsel in 1872. He represented a Liberal constituency in Parliament from 1874 to 1885, was knighted in 1880, and was made solicitor-general in Mr. Gladstone's ministry in the same year. He was raised to the peerage and became lord high chancellor in 1886, and again entered Mr. Gladstone's cabinet as lord high chancellor in 1892. He was one of the two British members of the Venezuelan Arbitral Tribunal, and last year was commissioned as a member of the United States and British Joint High Commission.

Mr. President, in the death of Lord Herschell the United States loses an intelligent and steadfast friend and the Kingdom of Great Britain a wise and loyal public servant. Lord Herschell was one of the most distinguished subjects and statesmen of Great Britain, a trusted friend and counselor of Mr. Gladstone. He came to this country in August last upon a mission which had for its purpose the promotion of the mutual welfare and good neighborhood of the United States and Great Britain.

He entered upon the work of the Joint High Commission established by these two great governments with an earnest desire to cooperate in removing the causes of difference between them and of bringing the two peoples into closer and more cordial relations. He was gratified with the recent evidence of increased sympathy between them and with the prospect of promoting a spirit of mutual good will which would redound to their future honor and power.

Sir, his untimely death most deeply touches not only his colleagues upon the commission, but the American people, who jointly share with the people of Great Britain the great bereavement.

Mr. President, I now offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sensibility of the death of Lord Herschell, an eminent jurist and statesman of Great Britain, formerly lord high chancellor; a member of the United States and British joint high commission.

Resolved, That the President of the Senate is requested to convey to Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain the sympathy of the Senate of the United States in the great loss which she and the people of Great Britain have sustained by the death of Lord Herschell.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, in rising to second these resolutions, I can find only a few words in which to express the very great shock that came to me as it did to all who either knew Lord Herschell personally or had heard of his presence amongst us on the high mission with which he had been intrusted by his own country. It was my privilege to know Lord Herschell upon the commission which met the British commission in Quebec in August last; and I want to bear testimony to the great pleasure that that opportunity of knowing the deceased British statesman gave me, and how eminently he illustrated to my mind, as well as to the minds of my colleagues, all that is best in the traditions of English statesmanship and English character.

Thoroughly an Englishman, loyal to his trust, he was friendly, conciliatory, and, above all, anxious that the commission of which he was the most distinguished head should be instrumental in bringing the relations between the two countries that we represented to a basis of permanent friendship and mutual respect. He was broad, statesmanlike, and intelligent, with a mind admirably equipped for the great work he had undertaken. He had a great opportunity for usefulness, and he most signally improved it. I can hardly conceive of anyone who had attributes that were more calculated to assist in bringing to a proper conclusion the great work in which we were all engaged.

His death is not only a great loss to Great Britain, but it is a great loss to the people of the United States, and it is eminently fitting that we should unite with his countrymen in heartfelt mourning for his untimely death.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it has been suggested that, as chairman of the Law Committee of the Senate, I should add a word to what has been said. Of course, at this stage of the public business it should be but a word.

It is a very proper exception to our usual custom that is proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] when he asks the Senate to express its respect for the distinguished English lawyer and statesman who has died here. He came to this country on a friendly errand. He was one of the very best among the great roll of English chancellors; and English chancellors are almost as much authority here as in Great Britain itself. So, although the particular parties to the suit may be Englishmen and not Americans, yet everything else that belongs to the judgment as a rule in jurisprudence for the future is spoken equally with authority and weight to our forty-five American States as it is to Her Majesty's realm.

Lord Herschell was eminent among chancellors, English lawyers, and jurists for his practical wisdom. The practice of the chancery court as administered by him, the principles of equity jurisprudence were stripped of their ancient obscurities and formalities and delays and technicalities, and became a living, simple rule for the administration of justice. Lord Chancellor Herschell was not only famous for that quality, but he was eminent among English statesmen and legislators as a law reformer.

The code of laws that affects the transfer of estates, the settlement of estates, the simplification of land titles, proper systems of record, all the vast administration which affects the right, liberty, life, and property of a great civilized people, he was constantly striving to improve and to perfect; and his name is inseparably connected with the wonderful reforms in pleading, practice, jurisprudence, local administration, as well as the larger administrations of the whole realm for which the present generation in England has been so much distinguished.

He introduced or helped to introduce into England many reforms of that kind which have been adopted here in many of our States. He was a very careful and diligent student of the local improvements in State, township, and city which have been made in this country, and he introduced them to his own countrymen without the prejudice that sometimes exists against everything foreign.

This was not his first visit to the United States. He made a visit to Boston some years ago, in which it was my privilege to form a brief but extremely delightful acquaintance with him, and to get infinite instruction from his account of what he was interested in at home, and his wise suggestions about our matters of legislation, jurisprudence, and administration.

I desire to bear my hearty tribute to his illustrious memory, and to join in the expression of sympathy to be conveyed to his countrymen and his family by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES UPON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE DINGLEY.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives upon the death of Hon. NELSON DINGLEY be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read. The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 11, 1899.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine submits resolutions, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the duty rests with me, as the fellow-citizen and neighbor for a great many years of the Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, my successor in the National House of Representatives, to place in the records of Congress a brief sketch of his life, leaving to my colleague and other Senators having knowledge only of his public career the eulogistic tributes to which that career is so justly entitled.

Governor DINGLEY was born February 15, 1832, in the farming town of Durham, a few miles only from the city where he spent the greater part of his life and achieved his remarkable success as a journalist. His ancestors were rugged, honest, sensible folk—economical, hard working, and successful. His boyhood promised the manhood we admire. Whatever work was given him to do was well done. In the public school, in the academy and college he was studious, diligent, and obedient, ever standing at the head, finally graduating at Dartmouth College with the highest honors. Fortunately for him, his mother had been before her marriage a school-teacher, and undoubtedly gave direction to his school life.

In 1851 he entered the college in Maine, then known as Waterville, now as Colby University, remained there two years, then entered the junior class of Dartmouth. While at Waterville he connected himself with the Congregational Church and was a faithful, consistent member to his death. He early espoused the cause of temperance, was connected with several associations organized for its promotion, and was an earnest advocate of the principles of prohibition.

In 1853 he became a resident of the town of Auburn, now a beautiful and thriving city, situated on the Androscoggin River, just opposite Lewiston, where his active business life was spent. In 1857 he married Miss Salome McKenney, and was as successful in this venture as in everything else, for she proved a most affectionate, devoted wife to the end, and was a wise though indulgent mother to his children.

I think he had determined on journalism as his life work even before his graduation. He studied law, but only to broaden the foundation of the structure he proposed to build. In 1858 he became a part owner in the Lewiston Journal, then a weekly of limited circulation. Subsequently he and his brother acquired the sole ownership. The paper is now a daily and weekly, with the largest circulation of any in the State, and probably as well conducted as any in New England. That his interest in this enterprise was intense is clearly indicated by this allusion in his will:

I regard the Lewiston Journal, to the building up of which the most of my life was given, as the best monument which can be preserved to my memory.

However devoted he may have been to this his favorite work, the people were not disposed to leave him to its exclusive enjoyment. He was elected to the legislature of his State in 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1868, and 1873. He served two of these terms as speaker of the house.

He was elected governor of Maine in 1874 and 1875. It is unnecessary to say that he filled all these public positions with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. I having resigned my seat in the House in 1881, Mr. DINGLEY was elected to succeed me and served well his country and his State in that distinguished body until his death, January 13, 1899.

It was a most remarkable service. The arena into which he entered is one where a man wears only what he wins. He was apparently not well equipped for the contest before him, for he was not an orator, never indulged in eloquent periods, had but little imagination, was without that persuasive, magnetic power possessed by some, was not physically strong; and yet, from the speech he made on the restoration of the merchant marine in the earlier days of his service to the end his growth in influence was constant, until I think it is safe to assert that as its leader in the Fifty-fifth Congress he led more effectually than any man has within my memory.

He had the entire confidence of the House, it being well understood that he never debated any question without first having made himself master of the subject; that he never attempted any deceptive reasonings, nor indulged in any sophistry; never misstated nor distorted facts. He served on the most important committees in the House—on Banking and Currency, Appropriations, and Ways and Means, as chairman of the last. The act known as "the Dingley tariff," both in committee and in the House, owed its success to his knowledge of affairs, his sagacity in management, and his skill as a parliamentarian.

Appointed by the President a member of the United States and British Joint High Commission, he became at once a most influential participant in its deliberations, and his death before the conclusion of its work was a most serious loss to both commission and our country.

At a time when the existing conditions in our country required for the great office of the Secretary of the Treasury extraordinary qualifications, and President McKinley had the Republic to select from, he, having personal knowledge of his eminent fitness, tendered the position to Governor DINGLEY, who, knowing well the exacting duties of the office and his physical condition, felt that the burden would be greater than he could carry, and declined the appointment.

Am I not fully justified in my assertion that Mr. DINGLEY's public career was a most remarkable one? Governor DINGLEY's private life, though from the very nature of the man not conspicuous, may well be commended as a model. As a husband, he was devoted and faithful; as a father, wise, generous, and indulgent; as a citizen, never shrinking from the duties of citizenship; an active friend of education, temperance, and religion; an earnest promoter of every good work. To crown all, he was himself a follower of his Lord. In a letter of instructions accompanying his will he closes with these words:

My strongest desire is that my children may maintain such pure, noble, and Christian life and character as will honor their father, make happy the last days of their mother, and fit them for the life of heaven, where I hope through Christ's love to meet our reunited family.

A life here abounding in the rewards man can bestow has there been crowned with "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, in paying our last sad tribute of friendship, affection, and honor to the memory of Hon. NELSON DINGLEY I shall indulge in no extravagant eulogy, which I know would be extremely distasteful to him were he living and present to hear it.

The simple, truthful statement of his life works and true character are amply sufficient to justify all I can say.

Mr. DINGLEY was born at Durham, Me., February 15, 1832, on one of the rugged farms of Maine.

His father was an agriculturist and country merchant of unquestioned worth, energy, and steadfast purpose.

His mother, prior to her marriage, had been a teacher and was a lady of rich attainments and most exemplary character.

He inherited the noblest and best traits of character of both his parents.

He graduated from Dartmouth College in the class of 1855. Studied law and was admitted to the bar, and possessed a strong judicial character. His tastes led him from the law to become the proprietor and editor of the Lewiston, Me., daily and weekly Journal, in 1856, which he maintained to the day of his death. He was a terse and forceful writer and made his paper the leading and an influential journal not only in Maine, but in all the New England States.

He soon entered the political arena, and was elected a member of the State house of representatives in 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, four successive terms, and again in 1868 and in 1873. He was chosen speaker of the house in 1863 and again in 1864, and declined a reelection, preferring his place upon the floor.

In these positions of honor and trust he endeared himself to the people of the whole State, and they elected him governor of the State in 1873. His administration of State affairs was honest and acceptable, and he was reelected governor in 1874, and declined a renomination in 1875.

He was elected a Representative in Congress in 1881 to fill the vacancy caused by the election of Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE to the United States Senate, and was reelected a Representative at large to the Forty-eighth Congress, and was elected to the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon him by Bates College in 1874 and by Dartmouth College in 1894.

He was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1856, and was at the time of his death a member of the commission to adjust the differences between the United States and Canada.

I became quite closely associated with Governor DINGLEY while he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and a member of the legislative commission, commonly known as the "Dockery Commission," created by the act approved March 3, 1893, and composed of Hons. A. M. DOCKERY, chairman, and NELSON DINGLEY and JAMES D. RICHARDSON on the part of the House, and Senators CULLOM, and JONES of Arkansas, and myself on the part of the Senate, with Messrs. James C. Courts and Thomas P. Cleaves, clerks respectively of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, serving as invaluable aids.

In the exceedingly important and successful work of that commission, Mr. DINGLEY was a most potential factor. I heartily endorse the words uttered by my colleague in the House, Hon. A. M. DOCKERY, touching the part performed by Mr. DINGLEY:

In pursuing its labors the commission largely relied upon the sound judgment of Mr. DINGLEY. He united in a peculiar degree legislative and executive capacity of the highest order.

This retrospect of the public positions filled by Mr. DINGLEY during a period of thirty-seven years is most instructive, and shows that in a preeminent degree he held and enjoyed the respect, the confidence, and the friendship of the good people of his native State, who gladly bestowed upon him positions of honor, trust, and responsibility one after another in almost continuous succession.

Few men in public life have ever so fully met the expectations of their constituency in so many trying positions for so long a period of time.

The Rev. G. M. Howe, his pastor, in his sermon on the occasion of the burial of Mr. DINGLEY, at Lewiston, Me., in speaking of his public life, said:

As we contemplate his remarkable career, beginning here in this city, where he has made his home, extending throughout the country, covering the State which he so ably and honorably served as governor, and then enlarging until it extended over a nation of 70,000,000 people.

Nor was his influence limited by the confines of the Republic. It swept beyond these, commanding the respectful attention of the world's leading statesmen and affecting directly or indirectly the legislation of all the nation. While he was thus pressing his way upward to the high position which he filled his influence was deepening and broadening in the community where he began his eventful career. This commanding influence was not the result of fortune or adventitious circumstances, but was the legitimate outcome of a life "laid in deep and solid foundations and reared in harmonious and endearing proportions."

Such results could have been achieved only by fidelity to duty and an unflinching faith in the rectitude of his purposes. From the beginning of his active life he must have been dominated by the loftiest and noblest of moral ideals.

It could not have been otherwise, for while it is possible to so order one's conduct as to deceive here and there an individual, it is impossible for a public servant to deceive millions of people for a generation. No craft, however skillfully employed, could for so long a time disguise the hypocrisy or hide the corruption.

As President Lincoln said:

You can fool all of the people some of the time and some of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time.

Quoting again from his pastor's sermon:

How is this constantly increasing and enduring strength with the vast majority of our people to be accounted for? What enabled our distinguished citizen to pass without a single stain upon his fair fame through the varied experiences of a long and peculiarly trying public life?

It was not great intellectual ability, for his was not a preeminent endowment. It was not eloquence, for he had no special gifts as an orator. It was not the charm of a polished manner, for, while he was ever affable and courteous, he had not cultivated the "arts of grace as a means to an end." What, then, was it that enabled him to attain unto and hold so long the position he occupied in the thought, esteem, and affection of his countrymen? The answer to these questions is found in his loyalty to principle, his devotion to truth, his thorough preparation, and conscientious work. Thus he was ever ready for and equal to the demands of the hour and the occasion.

By his earnest application to the task in hand and by his signal success in his chosen field of effort, he proved to the young men of this Republic that—

"The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they while their companions slept
Were toiling upward in the night."

Wherein lay the secret of his character, the strength and beauty of which all recognize? Does not the secret lie in his implicit faith in Christ and His atonement? From early manhood to the day of his death it was his cherished and avowed purpose not only to know but to do the will of his Divine Master.

What a testimony his consecrated life has been all these years to the influence and power of the Lord Jesus Christ!

Our friend, our collaborator in the Halls of our National Congress, has been taken from us and can not return to us.

While we mourn our great loss in his death, we can but feel that he has left us and the people of our great country a rich, inspiring, and ennobling legacy in his noble, exemplary Christian life and labors, a light to shine and guide, to elevate and encourage; for—

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.
So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

In politics Governor DINGLEY was an ardent Republican and devoted to the maintenance of his party. Few able leaders of his party have been members of the House, and yet he made no pretensions to leadership, no effort to dictate, and no appeals merely to partisan prejudice. His party friends followed him because they knew he was honest, sincere, thoroughly informed, and reliable, and earnestly devoted not only to what he believed to be for the best interests of the country but also to the best interests and success of his party.

While an ardent Republican, he was not offensively or obtrusively partisan, was not abusive or extravagant in his expressions in regard to political opponents and measures. To a remarkable degree he enjoyed the respect, confidence, friendship, and affection of his political opponents. While they recognized him as an able Republican leader, they knew that in all matters not political he was a patriot and devoted to good government and what he believed to be best for his country and people.

They had confidence in him and trusted him. Governor DINGLEY was the true gentleman in all the relations of life and in the discharge of all the duties of public positions. In debate he was conservative in expression, relying upon facts and figures presented and sustained by reason and logic.

Personally and socially he was always gentle, unobtrusive, courteous, and polite, and won the respect and confidence of those with whom he met.

He was true and faithful to his friends, and they were true, faithful, and devoted to him.

In his Christian home he was the devoted and faithful husband, the kind and affectionate father, the friendly, obliging, and beneficial neighbor. His character, his services, and his record, private and public, are without a stain of immorality, deception, fraud, or corruption, and are worthy of the imitation and emulation of all the young men of our great Republic.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, we pause to-day in the stress and strain of important and absorbing public business to do honor to the life and memory of NELSON DINGLEY. For the hour clashing debate is hushed, all controversies forgotten, and we gladly unite in paying tribute to his memory.

Mr. DINGLEY was a remarkable man. Nature, sometimes so lavish in its special gifts and graces, bestowed but few on him. He was not endowed with a charming personality, with great eloquence, or with that quality which for want of a better term we call personal magnetism; there was in his presence and bearing, in speech and style, less to attract and win favor than is usual in the case of men who reach high position and acquire a commanding influence in national affairs.

It may, I think, be fairly said of him that nature put him at a disadvantage in the struggle for eminence, but that in spite of all disadvantages he had long before his death reached a preeminent place in the councils of the nation and in the estimation, regard, and affection of its people. The estimation in which he was held by the public was truly reflected when, in anticipation of his death, there passed from lip to lip all over the land the words "No one can take his place."

He was the acknowledged leader of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States. Whoever becomes chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of that body is recognized, nominally at least, as its leader. In our history a few only occupying that position have left behind them a reputation for real leadership, but of such real leaders NELSON DINGLEY was a most conspicuous example. He possessed many of the elements of true greatness, but was so modest and unassuming that it required the second thought to appreciate that greatness.

The public has a very inadequate conception of the real labor, responsibility, and struggle through which and by which a member of Congress comes to be recognized as entitled to a place in the front rank of legislators. Few people, I think, appreciate the wonderful extent of our country, the multiplicity and importance of the measures considered in its Congress; fewer still have any conception of the weary mental processes by which they are so comprehended as to be wisely considered.

Nor is justice done by the public to the ability of the House of Representatives. No other popular legislative body in the world represents so large or so intelligent a constituency, and I am sure it is not pride of country alone which induces me to say that the standard of ability is higher in the Congress of the United States than in any other representative legislative body.

Oratory, conflict, and sensation attract the public, and our people too largely judge the House of Representatives by the notices of its proceedings which through the press reach the public eye and influence the public mind. They scarcely stop to think that amid all its eloquence, conflict, and sensational scenes there is a real, practical, earnest, and full appreciation of the wants and needs of the people and an intelligent and able direction of its great purposes and interests.

They do not fully appreciate that what our country is has been the result of carefully considered and wisely enacted legislation; and I may, I trust, be pardoned when I say that they have a very inadequate conception of the "patient search and vigil long" of the member of House or Senate who comes to have national recognition as one prominent in the molding of such legislation.

But here was a man with few natural gifts, with nothing of adventitious circumstance to aid him, with little power to charm by eloquence, or to attract attention by traits which excite personal admiration, who came to be foremost in the legislative councils of the country. His opinions were accepted, his conclusions followed, by a great and able body of legislators with almost implicit reliance and faith.

How did he acquire such preeminence? What was the secret of his great influence? Why was his the directing mind and purpose in legislation? There must have been something unusual in the man which thus enabled him to lead and direct, and it is most interesting to seek the source of such influence and power.

I think it may be found in two conspicuous qualities of the man. First, in his intense, unquestioned honesty; second, in his unwearied, never-ceasing application. Absolute honesty and untiring industry were the secrets of his great success. I think I never knew a man with greater accuracy of information, and this was so generally recognized that his statements of fact upon any topic were scarcely ever disputed. How easy it is now to give utterance to this truth, and yet how little we can realize through what laborious study, intense and patient application he came to be possessed of this wide and accurate information.

I think I never knew a man in public life who followed more unswervingly his convictions of right and duty than NELSON DINGLEY. How easy it is now to say this, and yet men little realize how hard it is for one in public life to live up to his convictions of public duty, never to be swayed by the importunities of friends, never to be deterred by the fear of personal or political criticism. What an example for the youth of our country is presented in the triumph of NELSON DINGLEY over the lack of natural advantages by strict adhesion during all his life to these two guiding forces—honesty and industry.

We are apt to speak of training in life without really estimating the value of training. Mr. DINGLEY was fortunate in his training. He was a journalist and a lawyer. Any lawyer worthy of the name learns to weigh all questions presented to him with the utmost care, to investigate fully, carefully consider the application of legal rules and principles to facts, and then reach conclusions which to him are just and final; a lawyer's processes are therefore slow and hesitating.

The journalist, on the other hand, seizes the facts in a moment, and forms his conclusions instantly. Electricity brings daily to his sanctum the news of the globe. It must be digested and commented upon in the morning issue of his paper. As a wide landscape is imprinted as with a flash of lightning upon the retina of his natural eye, so the transpiring events of the whole world are imprinted upon the mental retina of the journalist, and like the conceptions resulting from natural vision, so the conceptions of his mental vision are instantly taken up in his consciousness.

In Mr. DINGLEY's case the swift processes which came from his journalistic training were affected by the slower processes of his legal experience, and vice versa; the mental habits of the journalist and lawyer were united, and the result was most happy.

But, after all, whether as lawyer, journalist, or legislator, his greatest power lay in the fact that he was ever true to himself and his convictions. How appropriate to his life is that scriptural phrase, "patient continuance in well-doing." How it marks and explains every step in his career; and when we consider the life work, reputation, and triumph of Mr. DINGLEY, another message and injunction of the Sacred Book comes to us most impressively: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

We all know that Mr. DINGLEY was "faithful unto death," and we are equally sure that his is now the "crown of life."

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, the Senate, even in the closing hours of its session, can well afford to suspend its legislative labors to pay a fitting tribute to the life and character of NELSON DINGLEY.

Reflection upon the death of this good man may thus be made the means of elevating and strengthening the purpose and character of those who may follow his successful career. Man is imitative. When a life of virtue and industry has been crowned with success, it arrests attention and commands consideration. Whose life, among our public men, could more strikingly illustrate those elements of power than that of this beloved representative of the State of Maine?

Let those familiar with the record of this quiet, unobtrusive, yet determined character, in the language of truth and not of extravagance, tell the youth of our country how, by the exercise of his natural endowments and acquired habits, he gradually but surely overcame every obstacle and surmounted every difficulty found in his pathway until at the hour of his death he was seen standing upon an eminence sufficiently lofty to gratify the highest ambition—the recognized and honored leader of so distinguished a body as that of the House of Representatives. Will not such a recital tend to stimulate the aspirations and encourage the loftiest sentiments of others to follow in his footsteps, to be influenced by his example, and to be strengthened by his virtues in their efforts to reach that plane of confidence and honor which has marked the career of this distinguished American?

Mr. DINGLEY was not a man who, on the hustling or in a deliberative body, would arouse admiration by his wit or excite enthusiasm by the brilliancy of his conceptions. He had not the gift of the orator. He carried his audience with him, not by arousing their emotions and then temporarily direct them, but by an appeal to their intellectual integrity. As a speaker he possessed none of those physical characteristics which add so much to the effectiveness of the orator, nor did he indulge in those figures of rhetoric so frequently relied upon by the advocate.

His voice was low and at times harsh. His presence was not commanding. With these disadvantages, I am not using the language of exaggeration when I assert that when he addressed that distinguished deliberative body of which he was so prominent a member no man deserved or secured more respectful or closer attention than Mr. DINGLEY.

The reason for this is not difficult to understand. Mr. DINGLEY was a leader possessing strong convictions and a large storehouse of information. He never sought to direct and guide others until he himself had first mastered the subject. His mind was not only logical, but essentially analytical. His premise, from which he reasoned to a conclusion, was never assumed until, by analysis, he had proved its correctness.

He never relied upon the arts and tricks of the orator. He planted himself upon the solid foundations of conviction and knowledge, and builded his arguments by a direct appeal to the conscience and intellect of his hearers. His method of presenting a subject was directed by the skill of the logician, the tactics of the strategist, and his arguments bristled with an array of facts and statistics which, if admitted to be true, rendered his conclusions impregnable.

Mr. DINGLEY must have appreciated early in life the wisdom of the philosopher who held that as an essential element of success the individual must first know and appreciate his weakness and defects, as well as the elements of his strength. He understood the scope of his capacity better than even his most intimate friend. He did not seek to overcome the impossible, but concentrated his indomitable energy in an effort to develop and improve every faculty and gift with which nature had endowed him. His patience was inexhaustible. His confidence in himself never wavered. Realizing that he was not possessed of the weapons of brilliancy, wit, and satire, he determined to lead and command by the accuracy of his information, the fullness of his knowledge, and in the skill and tact with which he presented his subject.

Mr. DINGLEY possessed one of the most essential elements of a successful parliamentary leader. His phlegmatic temperament gave him complete control over all his faculties and emotions. The aggressive assault of an adversary, either directed against himself or the subject he championed, failed to irritate him beyond perfect self-control, and no measure in his charge was ever lost by irritability or mismanagement. He declined to meet such an attack with a harsh rejoinder or by an unkind retort. Cool, self-possessed, earnest, he persistently kept his mind directed to the accomplishment of the object he had in view, permitting all irrelevant subjects brought into the debate to pass unnoticed. These qualities made him both a great leader and a dangerous opponent.

Personally, Mr. President, I became better acquainted with Mr. DINGLEY in my service with him as a member of the joint high commission between Great Britain and this country, to settle the differences existing between the United States and Canada. My close association and frequent conference with him upon that commission enabled me to form a better judgment of his true mental stature and his social qualities.

In the consultations which were held and in the discussions which followed upon the important questions involved in those negotiations I learned to appreciate how thoroughly equipped he was upon all of the great public questions involved and which bore so directly upon the interest of the people of this country. His information was full and accurate. His views were broad, wise, and statesmanlike. His temperament was calm and judicious. His intellectual processes were clear and penetrating, and his power of both analysis and construction unusual.

During the progress of those negotiations I appreciated fully one of his most striking characteristics, and which is essential in a great leader. I refer to his confidence in his final judgment and conclusions.

Mr. President, the conclusion reached by Mr. DINGLEY, after a mature consideration of a subject, always rested upon a broad, not a narrow, view of the question. He did not permit his judgment to be influenced by sectional or local considerations when considering a question involving national interest.

As a master of the subject under consideration, confident in his own judgment as to the public sentiment of the American people, like a well-trained lawyer who had prepared his case with thoroughness and ability, he knew almost intuitively the extent that he could go in the compromise of conflicting interests, with an assurance that his action would be sustained by an enlightened public sentiment. Sir, none of his associates in public life will feel more deeply the loss of his wise counsel, his well-equipped mind, his broad and sound views upon public questions, his firmness and patriotism, than those who were associated with him on the British-American Commission.

Mr. President, Mr. DINGLEY in his social relations in life was one of the most agreeable and charming men that it has been my fortune to meet since I entered the public service. Although never idle, he was never too busy to greet any who approached him with a genial welcome that would remove at once any doubt in the mind that your interruption was an intrusion. His greatest delight seemed to be in conveying information from that well-stocked storehouse of knowledge which he had so luxuriously furnished in many years of laborious work.

To him all questions of life in the political, moral, and social world demanded of him serious consideration, and found him possessed, when they were discussed, with earnest convictions. Although a man of great firmness of character, I have never heard a harsh word or one of unkindness escape his lips. The malice of weakness, the envy of littleness, and the jealousy of inferiority were foreign to his nature and to the rounded development of his character.

In the consciousness of a pure and the contentment of a successful life, surrounded with the fond affections of a noble wife and the devotion of his children, he pursued his duties and met his responsibilities with confidence in his ability to fully measure up to every position which a long and honored life of public service imposed upon him.

Mr. President, Mr. DINGLEY was a wise and far-seeing statesman, a firm and faithful friend, a courteous and genial companion, a safe and conservative leader, a devoted husband, and an affectionate and indulgent father, a pure and consistent Christian, and one of the best types of the American politician.

May his memory be preserved in the hearts and affections of his people, and the record of his life encourage and sustain those who are seeking to attain the eminence that he reached. Let those who shall seek to occupy his place in the public eye emulate his virtues and win their honors by the employment of those pure and manly methods which from early manhood to the hour of his death guided and directed his honored career as he advanced step by step in the confidence and esteem of his country.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, not long after Mr. DINGLEY became a Representative in Congress I discovered and had public occasion to extol his remarkable powers of research, arrangement, and exposition in dealing with economic questions. Whenever he wrote or spoke on any important subject it was certain that he had thoroughly investigated it and that his presentation would be full and complete, neglecting no fact and avoiding no possible view of the question discussed. It is no slight compliment to him to say, as was often said when inquiry for information was made upon complicated subjects, "Mr. DINGLEY has investigated it. Look at his conclusions. You may be sure you will learn the whole case."

Mr. DINGLEY had important characteristics which thus made him exceedingly useful in his public career as a journalist, as governor, and as a legislator. His industry was untiring. He gave his whole time to his work. He enjoyed it, and it seemed as if he had adopted working as a principle. Work, indeed, has been commended as the highest wisdom as well as the greatest enjoyment of life. One writer says:

We enjoy ourselves only in our work, and our best doing is our best enjoyment.

Carlsle says:

Blessed is he who has found his work. Let him ask no other blessedness. He has a work, a life purpose; he has found it and will follow it.

Thus believing, Mr. DINGLEY was "never idle a moment, but thrifty and thoughtful of others."

He unwisely, like too many others, neglected exercise and the proper care of his health in order that he might press on with the duties he owed and the labors he loved. Such constant and unrelaxed training of the brain, without due physical culture, tends to shorten life, and therefore to lessen the sum of one's achievements, which could be made much greater by more care and prudence. But Mr. DINGLEY thus labored incessantly with all his mental resources and made himself one of the most industrious men the country ever saw.

Mr. DINGLEY also made his work in life a serious one. Not that he was not genial in his associations with mankind, but he did not stop for frivolity or even for humor. His earnestness in pursuing what he sought would not allow him to tolerate diversions of fun or fancy. He had, I think, the highest conception of the obligations which fall upon every man worthily to do his part in life, to account for his talents, to make a profitable use of himself, to serve helpfully his fellow-men; and soberly, seriously, and persistently he pursued his ideals.

Moreover, he was in the highest degree unselfish. No thought of personal aggrandizement entered into the zeal with which he performed his chosen work. Whatever of success came to him, whatever of distinction and honor from his fellow-men, was not eagerly sought for, but came naturally and almost without desire. He worked not for his own profit and glory, but only in order that he might serve his State and his country.

So Mr. DINGLEY walked the straight and direct pathway of life, industrious, serious, and unselfish. He became the leading journalist of Maine. He grew to be highly influential through his editorials and through his political addresses, which were unornate, plain, straightforward, and convincing to the voters, and led to his nomination and election as governor. When his friend and townsman, the present junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], left the House of Representatives to enter upon a long and honorable career in the Senate, Mr. DINGLEY naturally became his successor in the House.

Soon his unostentatious ability, his cheerful patience, his untiring zeal, his unrivaled sagacity, and his marvelous common sense began to distinguish him upon the national field. Fortunately for this modest gentleman, as well as fortunately for the country, he became chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, and his name became associated with the tariff act of 1897, to the construction of which he gave the best possible work of his full and fertile brain.

Every country owes a great debt of gratitude to those of its public servants who, like Mr. DINGLEY, untiringly work out the details of the legislation of the Government, which it is so important to the public welfare to have perfectly and completely arranged. This part in the work of Congress our most brilliant orators, our most famous statesmen, are apt to neglect. That such details are willingly and patiently taken up and disposed of wisely and safely by legislators like Mr. DINGLEY, ever present, ever active, and ever self-sacrificing in their country's service, is one of the most encouraging features of our method of government.

How often do we see such a man giving to his official work all the waking hours of his days and his nights, the whole of his mental powers exhaustively exerted far more than they ever were or ever would be in his private business, and frequently to the neglect and destruction of such private business and the diminution or loss of his private fortune. Such cases are not rare and have been noticed by every Senator now present. Many members of Congress and Senators work hard and die poor in the public service.

They have their compensations—the consciousness of faithful labor, the honor of Congressional eminence, and the mental growth which public life stimulates; but the rewards of wealth, which the same exercise in the field of business doubtless would have given to them, are not theirs. To this noble class of men, of whom too much praise can not be spoken, Mr. DINGLEY belonged, and to them and to him is due every possible tribute of appreciation and affection which a grateful country can bestow.

New England is proud of her sons who have achieved distinction in various forms upon national fields. The State of Maine cherishes and persistently sustains her chosen Representatives and Senators in Congress, among whom have been seen profound thinkers, eloquent speakers, and patriotic statesmen of the highest order of merit. Mr. DINGLEY was a worthy member of the noble Congressional group to which he belonged.

Faithful in life to every duty to his fellow-men, the best yet remains to be said of him, that he was, above all, a devoted servant of the living God in whom he believed. Constantly maintaining his faith in the invisible, he always looked hopefully forward to the time of his translation to higher duties in another sphere.

We are accustomed to speak of death as giving rest, and we wisely believe that it does give rest—rest from the weariness of the flesh and from the disappointments and sorrows of this earthly life. But we do not think that we shall rest perpetually. We believe that our souls shall be divinely renewed and that we shall be re-inspired to higher and grander activities.

The friend we mourn is already rested and refreshed by angelic ministrations. We can not tell how long he must wait before he can clasp hands with the Master or look upon the great white throne and Him who sits upon it, but we feel sure that even now, in happy companionship with those whom he loved and lost on earth, he is entering with joy and felicity into noble service for God in the mansions of the blessed in heaven.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, in the death of NELSON DINGLEY the State of Maine lost one of her most eminent sons and the nation one of her most distinguished and useful statesmen. The Senate of the United States does well to pause in the great work committed to it and place upon its enduring records fitting tribute to his memory. The ceremony of the hour is always impressive, but never more impressive than now.

When the Fifty-fifth Congress convened, one of the most conspicuous figures among its members was NELSON DINGLEY. Much was demanded of him in the public exigency, much was expected. To-day we stand at the close of a Congress which will remain memorable in the annals of the Republic and express our estimate of his worth and work.

I would not presume to enter upon an extended account of the career or analysis of the character of this eminent and worthy statesman in the presence of those who wrought with him in the public service for almost a lifetime. There are those here whom it would better become to speak of him at length than myself, but none can express a more profound admiration for his life and character than I.

His chief monument, the great measure with which his name is forever associated, was enacted by the present Congress. The work was arduous, but he did not avoid it. The more difficult the task the greater his devotion. His ample experience, his profound judgment, his mastery of detail, his comprehension of economic principles were summoned to the work.

I know from his own lips with what keen satisfaction he looked upon the fruit of his labors and saw the fulfillment of all his prophecies.

My personal acquaintance with Mr. DINGLEY began but a comparatively short period before the opening of the present Congress. It was my good fortune to have been intimately associated with him in the public service, where I had opportunity to appreciate the high qualities which he possessed in abundant degree. As a member of the United States and British Joint High Commission he displayed in full measure those attributes which gave to him the leadership of the House of Representatives and made his name indeed a household word throughout the Republic.

My preconceived estimate of his character was only heightened by closer and more intimate association. He addressed himself to the work of the commission with consummate skill and unflagging zeal. His information was large, his patience and industry a fitting complement. He was exhaustless in research, accurate and logical in statement, and withal possessed of a judicial temperament. He was disposed to investigate, then decide. His conclusions were deliberately reached and not hastily abandoned.

His modesty was a conspicuous trait. It was the modesty of wisdom. He avoided all vulgar display, and was at all times actuated by a sense of the highest duty, a duty which ever seemed to be his perfect master.

I can not conceive that he was ever influenced by an ignoble or debased motive. He delighted to serve the people. The major part of his life was devoted to their cause. No task in their behalf was too heavy. He did not seek the applause of the moment, but the approving judgment of mature reflection. He sought that which endured as the solid rock, not that which was as fleeting as the summer clouds.

The dedication of his life to the public service was free from any taint or thought of mere personal gain. Whether occupying the exacting position of speaker of the house of representatives, or the chief executive office of his State, or a place in the leadership of the national House of Representatives, he regarded himself as merely an agency in the promotion of the public welfare. His editorial experience was correlated to his public service. His love for the State of Maine and her people was intense; his admiration of his country and of his countrymen was profound.

He had been an accurate and critical student of his country's history, of its industries, of its opportunities, of its possibilities, and believed that under the inspiration of the policy and principles of which he was so loyal and able an exponent, a mighty destiny lay before us.

He easily and instantly impressed one with an abiding sense of loyalty to his convictions. He was direct in his mental processes; he was incapable of dissimulation.

He was not a brilliant man; he was a safe man. He possessed the highest moral courage, and followed fearlessly wherever conscience and duty, which were synonymous with him, led.

He was a plain man—plain in habit, plain in manner. He came from the farm where the best citizenship and statesmanship are nurtured. There he learned the invaluable lessons of conservatism, economy, labor, and an abiding faith in his fellow men. There he learned to love the fields and hills about him, and the institutions of his country which secured him in their enjoyment.

He was a man of infinite culture. He had indeed been an apt student of men and measures. While he accomplished great works, he did not claim extraordinary gifts. He possessed all the essential qualities of virile manhood and of vigorous and robust statesmanship.

He was charitable in his judgments. He was not quick to condemn, but eager to forgive.

He controlled men not by artifice, not by demagogic appeal, but by the force and merit of his own cause. His genius was patience.

Mr. DINGLEY died when his great services were most needed. He was a man of constructive statesmanship, and his experience and qualities were such that his country had much need of him. His was the wisdom which it was safe to follow in paths untrod; his lamp could well light the way.

He died bravely at the post of duty. His last moments were filled, as he could have wished, with thoughts of the State. In the delirium of disease he debated great affairs. His last thoughts were of public duty and of country. His last hours were devoted to the cause for which he had most lived—the cause of his countrymen.

Mr. DINGLEY arose to the full measure and stature of a statesman, and his name will long abide as one of the benefactors of his time.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, we pause a moment in the closing hours of one of the most momentous sessions of our Congress to pay a tribute of respect to one of our comrades who fell at his post of duty. He died full of years, full of honors, and in the full maturity of his manhood. He has paid the debt of nature which sooner or later all of us must pay. His earthly duties were about fulfilled and his ordained life work about accomplished when, like the golden grain ready to be harvested, he was garnered to his home on high. NELSON DINGLEY was taken in the midst of a useful life to his State and country, but not until he had made his impress as a public man upon the history of the times.

As chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, his name is connected with one of the great tariff bills of the country.

The State of Maine has been peculiar in the production of influential and illustrious public men. There is to-day possibly no State in the Union that exercises so dominating an influence in public affairs. The secret of this lies not only in the ability of those who represent her, but in their long continuance in public life. A long and varied experience has made the Representatives from Maine potential factors in the national councils, and the State has reaped the full reward of her policy of retaining her Representatives in office for a lifetime.

The great of earth, even from a human standpoint, are not always the most illustrious. Bismarck defined greatness as being the capacity for heroic work.

Gladstone, Washington, Bismarck, and Napoleon were all great and illustrious because their life work and achievements challenged the attention and admiration of the world and formed a part of the history of their times and countries. They strove not only to impress themselves upon the minds of cotemporaries, but looked to the bestowal of permanent blessings upon their race. Others whose names have not been so eulogized upon the pages of history have been as truly great, because in silent and heroic work they have been true benefactors of the human race.

It has been said that he who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before confers a blessing upon the world. How transcendently greater is the blessing conferred upon human kind by the statesman, poet, or philosopher who gives birth to some beautiful thought that through the ages refines, ennobles, and elevates mankind, making two virtues flourish instead of one.

The cultivation of the intellect and the development of the soul—these are the silent, unseen forces that have transformed the world into a fit abode for civilized man.

I shot an arrow into the air,
It fell to the earth—I knew not where;
For so swiftly it flew the sight
Could not follow its flight.

I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to the earth—I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong
That it can follow the flight of song?

Long afterward, in an oak
I found the arrow, still unbroke!
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend.

NELSON DINGLEY was great because he unceasingly worked for the good of his country and was patriotic and sincere in his devotion to the people. His knowledge of finance and tariff was phenomenal. His strong, rugged mind, retentive memory, large capacity for work, indomitable perseverance, and methodical habits well fitted him for delving into and mastering such intricate subjects. There was no superficiality about him, and nothing ever satisfied him but a perfect mastery of every subject that he undertook to investigate. He had a logical mind, a great fund of hard, common sense, and, while not an orator, whenever he addressed the House his well-reasoned speeches, replete with information, commanded the closest attention. Without ostentation or apparent effort he was a leader in all debates upon subjects which came within the range of his line of study.

Mr. DINGLEY was somewhat of a partisan, but he always subordinated party to the great principles underlying our republican institutions. Partisanship with him was esteemed a necessary quality of a public man, and whenever the storm of party passions were aroused and party interests were at stake he rose to a high plane of leadership, and others blindly followed his counsels. And yet, with all this intense partisanship, he was conservative; and his absolute honesty of mind and purpose, his irreproachable integrity of character, and his zeal and enthusiasm in any measure he advocated made him appear the faithful and conscientious public servant that he was.

I had the honor of serving for several years with Mr. DINGLEY upon the Ways and Means Committee of the House. I was on the committee while the Dingley bill was being framed, and I believe that he was an honest and incorruptible man. I learned to respect and admire his candor and sense of justice. Honestly and unreservedly he on all occasions expressed his convictions upon any public question, and while he enforced them with great earnestness he was courteous and respectful to those who differed with him. I am satisfied, however much I differed with some of his views, that in all that he did he sincerely believed that he was promoting the best interests of the country.

The allurements of public station could never swerve him from the line of duty. At the capital he lived a quiet life, industriously working for his constituents and country.

Had he lived a few months longer he would have grappled with and mastered some of the vexed problems growing out of the war with Spain, and thus added another chapter to his great life work.

As a man he was affable and approachable.

What he pretended to be he was. There was no duplicity in his nature. No one ever questioned his veracity or the sincerity of his professions. All admired his qualities of head and heart, his kindness of disposition, his unswerving integrity and uprightness of conduct. He had the simplicity of a child, with all the firmness of a stoic; the equanimity and gentleness of a Christian, with a subdued fierceness of feeling, when aroused in debate, of a strong partisan. He lived as he died, a valuable citizen, an honest Representative, a pure statesman, and a great and good man. He has laid aside his earthly duties and gone to his long rest. What and where this we do not know.

Sometimes I think there is only a thin but impenetrable veil between the here and the hereafter. It may be that the spirit world is everywhere in this great universe, and that spirit forms take cognizance of earthly things and move invisible amid the scenes of their mortal career. Dreams sometimes reveal to our senses the dead as living realities.

In sleep it may be that the unfettered soul wanders into the spirit realm; it may be that angel faces kiss the sleeper and woo for a season from this material world. If this be true, the spirit of NELSON DINGLEY will love to linger around the scenes of his public career and achievements.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, death has again invaded the Maine delegation. In the early days of this Congress, Mr. Milliken, after a long and honorable service in the House of Representatives, was taken away; and now, at the height of his influence and in the plenitude of his power, Governor DINGLEY has fallen. So great a figure had he become in public life that the civilized world took notice of his death. The Republic mourns the loss of one of her greatest and best public servants. In the State where he was born and which had so honored him, as he had honored the State, there has been everywhere a sense of personal loss. In his district men look appealingly in each other's face and say, "How shall we fill his place?"

Few men, Mr. President, in either House of Congress have attained the distinction and influence upon large national affairs acquired by Governor DINGLEY, and it is interesting to note that the great place which he filled in the other branch of Congress and in the public eye came to him by no luck or happening. It was in no degree fortuitous. From the day on which he entered the House of Representatives and took the positions assigned to him upon the committees of that body, I or anyone looking on could see plainly that he began to be considered and accepted as an authority on any subject which he investigated.

Those of us who were his personal friends and who watched his course closely were gratified to see that his sphere of influence was constantly widening. He did nothing by halves. He studied every proposition that came in his way intently. He went to the bottom of all things that came before him. He spared neither body nor mind in the labor which he devoted to important matters before arriving at his conclusions.

So, as he grew older in service and occupied higher positions upon leading committees, it began to be seen that, among all his fellows, he was one of the best equipped men in the body. He knew more about shipping than anyone else, and about the fisheries, and banking, and currency. And when he was, for a time, assigned to the great Committee on Appropriations, he mastered the details of the work of that committee, which gives a better education as to the workings of all branches of the Government than any other service in Congress. Many a time, when I have met him in conference committee, has he put the older members from either House of Congress to the blush by the extent and accuracy of his information.

When later, in an important crisis, which involved the great question of the revenues of the country being made adequate to its expenditures, the distinguished Speaker of the House called Mr. DINGLEY to the head of the great Committee on Ways and Means, there was but one voice in Congress and in the country as to the wisdom of the Speaker's act, and the trust and confidence of the country waited on Mr. DINGLEY in the new and important work he had undertaken. But, conspicuous as was this advancement, the governor had earned it all. Toilsome days and the midnight lamp, a life given almost entirely to hard work in the public service, were the price he had paid for his promotion.

How well he met every duty of the occasion is known to all men. The tariff act which goes under his name is speaking for itself to-day, and will continue to speak in the years to come. It was, of course, a Republican measure, founded on Republican policies and principles, but it has proved a bill for the good of the whole country, and, if ever this people recovers from its mad war delirium and settles back to the enjoyment of peace and the prosperity that can only come with peace, the revenue measure known as the "Dingley bill" will, in its operation, be its own vindication.

Mr. President, if Governor DINGLEY was not imaginative, he always was reasonable; if he was not fervid, he was logical; if he was not sensational and theatrical, he was wise and sensible, and the world of public life would be better if there were more such men. He had character, which is better than many accomplishments, in which indeed he was not lacking. He had the integrity which is priceless, which is beyond all assailants and all suspicion, and he had a firmness of conviction that carried him steadily on while other men wavered and changed.

Some of us feel deeply our personal loss in his death. I had known him well for thirty years, and during this long time we had always been friends. We did not always agree upon public measures, although not often differing, but the older I grew in intercourse with him, the more I saw of him, I learned the more to appreciate his good sense, his conscientiousness, his rectitude. He has gone from among us and his work must be taken up by other hands; but public life has been the better for his service in it, and it will be a long day before the gap which NELSON DINGLEY's death has made will be filled.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and the Senate (at 7 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 2, 1899, at 10.30 a. m.

Dette with the United States to build a stone wall of masonry around the national cemetery at Jefferson Barracks, in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, and the plans and specifications therefor, and any changes or modifications made therein, and the character, actual cost of material, and work in the construction of said wall; and whether by reason of any changes or modifications in said contract the cost of the work per perch was increased, and what loss was incurred on any additional work required by such changes or modifications, and what, if any, sum is reasonably and equitably due to the said Dette, in addition to the amount already paid him, by reason of such changes or modifications in his contract, and report the facts, with amount found due, to Congress.

That the Secretary of War and the proper accounting officers of the Government be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to charge to M. S. Hellman, of Canyon City, Oreg., the sum of $1,000 damages, as in full for all damages sustained by the United States for the breach of his contract, made July 5, 1871, with Capt. W. H. Bell, commissary of subsistence, United States Army, for the supply of flour at Camp Warner, Oreg., remitting all further claims of damage under said contract, and to settle and adjust his unsettled accounts with the Government, after the deduction of said sum of $1,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay this balance found due said Hellman upon the proper vouchers therefor; Provided, That the said Hellman shall accept the amount so found due in full and final settlement of all claims upon the Government.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the claim of Henry J. Hewitt, of the State of Missouri, for corn, oats, hay, horses, and wagons taken from him for the use of the Army in northern Missouri in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, and for the use and occupation of his hotel, storehouse, and barns by the military authorities of the United States at Macon City, Macon County, Mo., and at Lancaster, Schuyler County, Mo., during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, such investigation to extend to the status of the claimant, whether loyal or not, the value of the forage and other property taken, the actual rental value of the hotel, storehouse, and barns for the time they were occupied and used by the United States authorities; the purpose for which the hotel, storehouse, and barns were used and by whose authority and direction, and whether the forage, horses, and wagons so taken were a part of the outfit employed by him as a contractor or subcontractor in carrying the United States mails to northern Missouri and southern Iowa during the years named; and that the Secretary of War shall determine the value of such property, if any, and report the facts and amount found due to Congress.

That the personal representatives of the late John Sherman, jr., late United States marshal for the Territory of New Mexico, be, and they are hereby, relieved from the rendition of his emolument returns for the period from July 1 to December 31, 1881, and from January 1 to April 21, 1882, as required by section 833 of the Revised Statutes.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claim of Jesse H. Strickland, late colonel of the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry, for the pay and allowance of a colonel of cavalry

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army the circumstances, character, and extent of the claim of William Wolfe, of Shelby County, Mo., for the loss of the schooner Jana Sophia, belonging to him, and for freight while on a voyage from New Orleans, La., to Indianola, Tex., the said schooner alleged to have been lost, together with her cargo of public stores, while in the military service of the United States, off the bar at said Indianola, in the month of August, in the year 1865; and report the facts and amount found to be due to Congress.

In case of the death of any claimant, or death or discharge of any executor or administrator of any claimant herein named, then payment of such claim as herein provided shall be made to the legal representatives: Provided, That where a claimant is dead, the administrator, executor, or legal representatives shall file a certified copy of his bond, which bond must be at least equal in amount to the sum hereby appropriated: And provided further, That in all cases where the original claimants were adjudicated bankrupts the payments shall be made to the next of kin instead of to assignees in bankruptcy; but these provisions shall not apply to payments in the cases of the French spoliation claims, which shall be made as heretofore prescribed in this bill.

And the Senate agree to the same.

THAD. M. MAHON,
THEO. OTJEN,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. M. TELLER,
W. M. STEWART,
S. PASCO,

Mr. MAHON. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read instead of the report, as the statement explains fully the various provisions of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. What is this bill?

The SPEAKER. The general claims bill.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he proposes to allow any debate on the report?

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, this has been generally discussed in the House. Nearly all of the provisions have been debated fully, and at this late day in the session of course we can not consume very much time on it.

Mr. LOUD. Fully two-thirds of the items of this bill have never had a moment's consideration in the House, as the gentleman must be well aware.

Mr. MAHON. I believe I will be entitled under the rule to an hour, and the gentleman from California may have a certain portion of that time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How much time does the gentleman from California want?

Mr. LOUD. I want about fifteen minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope that will be allowed.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the gentleman out of my own hour, or I will ask unanimous consent, if this is satisfactory to the House, that fifteen minutes' debate be allowed on each side.

Mr. DOCKERY. That would not be sufficient. I want ten or fifteen minutes myself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want but a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The matter had better be presented to the House before the discussion begins.

The Clerk will read the statement presented by the House conferees.

The statement was read, as follows:

Statement of House conferees, to accompany report of conference committee on the bill (H. R. 4355) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, and for other purposes.

The bill as it passed the House provided for the payment of only the claims allowed by the Court of Claims under the Bowman and Tucker acts and carried an appropriation of about $1,189,000.

The Senate substituted the bill prepared by its Committee on Claims under an amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill approved July 19, 1897, and popularly known as the omnibus bill, carrying an appropriation of $9,000,455.00.

The conference committee has retained all the House provisions and added appropriations from the Senate bill amounting to about $1,911,249.83, bringing the total appropriation allowed by the bill as agreed upon by the conference to $3,100,704.83.

The additions made to the House bill in conference were:

Additional findings of the Court of Claims under the Bowman and Tucker acts, amounting to about.....	$377,964.74
French spoliation claims.....	1,055,473.04
Miscellaneous claims, about.....	423,802.05

Of the miscellaneous claims originally allowed in the Senate bill, all the items for the payment of claims of churches and schools and all those for the payment or adjustment of the claims of States against the Government were eliminated, except the Nevada State claim, which is referred to the Treasury Department for report. The Oregon claim is pending in the Court of Claims.

The claims allowed under the Navy Department contracts and through the findings of the Selfridge board of 1895 were all allowed by the conference, except the claims of the legal representatives of John Roach, which is not included in the bill as reported. The other claims allowed by the Selfridge board were subjected to a horizontal reduction of 20 per cent.

THAD. M. MAHON.
T. OTJEN.
JAMES D. RICHARDSON.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I reserve the point of order—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I make the point of order against the severing of the Senate amendment. The point is this, so far as I am concerned, that all of the Senate additions to the bill are included in one amendment, and they can not be severed by the committee of conference, but must be adopted in their entirety or rejected as a whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be an objection to all conference reports.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That may be, Mr. Speaker; but if the point is a correct one, it does not matter whether it applies to this report or to others.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was trying to determine the exact point that the gentleman from Missouri desired to raise. As the Chair understands the point, it must be incorrect, because otherwise there could not be conference reports; and as there are such reports, and as they have been accepted by both Houses, the Chair assumes that the point of order is not good.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My point, if the Chair will permit me, is this: That all of the various amendments added to this bill in the shape of appropriations by the Senate constitute but one amendment, and that they can not be severed in the consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that conference reports have been adopted in this form.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is nothing, Mr. Speaker, in this bill that was not in discussion between the two Houses. All we did was to eliminate from the Senate amendments a number of claims.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the conference committee could disagree to certain of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is all we did, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that I am entitled to an hour under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to an hour.

Mr. MAHON. I yield fifteen minutes of the time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is futile to attempt to defeat a measure after the North and South have combined to ravish the public Treasury. It does not make much difference, Mr. Speaker, how little merit the measure itself may have.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I hope we may have order, so that the House can hear what the gentleman from California has to say. We can not hear him right here.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, they do not want to hear this, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Chair has to apologize to the House, but it is very difficult to keep order—very difficult, indeed. Not only are there very many members present at the close of the session, but there are others whom the House has seen fit to admit to the floor, which makes the problem of keeping order a very difficult one, and the Chair can only succeed by the assistance of members. If gentlemen will have the kindness when they desire to converse with each other to retire to the cloakroom there will be no trouble. The Chair understands perfectly well that members do not understand how much confusion all of them make, because each one seems to be making so little. The Chair hopes that for the remainder of the session at least the members will restrain themselves.

The gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, the House itself knows very little indeed about what are known as the Bowman Act claims contained in this bill, which did receive partial consideration at the hands of the House. But as to the sum of $2,000,000, added to this bill by the Senate as the result of an agreement of the conferees, there is not a man on the floor of this House who can have any conception of the items contained in that $2,000,000. It may be a matter of small moment, Mr. Speaker, to this Congress, which appropriates millions by the hundreds; and yet I can not resist the temptation to say a word, in these the closing hours of Congress, against the passage of a measure of this character without any investigation whatever.

The report was not read. I do not suppose it would give us any information whatever. I looked in the RECORD this morning, hoping to see the report in print as it passed the Senate, but I find that the report does not appear in the RECORD. If so, I could not find it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was just looking for it myself.

Mr. LOUD. Well, it is not there. I want to say to the gentleman. I hoped to have an opportunity during the night or this morning to investigate some claims that this conference committee have incorporated here. Now, I know we ought to have great faith in our conferees, and I have, under ordinary circumstances. Yet as a member of Congress I think every member ought to have an opportunity to know what he is voting upon before he is called upon to cast that vote.

This bill as it went to conference contained about $10,000,000 or $11,000,000. The other body, the Senate, must have believed that those claims which they added were just as equitable as these that remain in the bill to-day.

Now, I want to say one word about the claims of the State of California. When this bill went into conference, I took occasion to repeat on this floor what had been repeated for many years and what I, without investigation, had accepted as a fact. You remember I held this claim up some time before permitting it to go into conference. My own State had in that bill claims amounting to nearly $4,000,000. It is a great temptation to the average member of Congress, Mr. Speaker, to see a claim of his own State or his own community amounting to $4,000,000 included in a bill. There was an agreement, as I stated at that time, that those claims never should be passed upon favorably by the conferees. I made at that time the charge that there was a compact. Believing then that those claims were just, I took occasion to say that every State in the Union had been paid for similar claims, and I immediately proceeded to investigate the record in this case, covering hundreds and hundreds of pages, musty now, to fortify myself to support these claims upon the floor of the House.

The further I went into the investigation of these claims, the more I was convinced, step by step, that they never had even equity before Congress. It may require some courage to say this with regard to the claims of a man's own State, but the claims of the State of California, the State of Oregon, and the State of Nevada, standing upon exactly the same plane, are simply claims for bounty; and there has not been a single State in the Union so far that has been reimbursed for the extra pay or bounty given to troops. I believe there is in that three or four million dollars an amount of some sixty or seventy thousand dollars that might come properly under the claim of equipment for troops, which some States have received pay for.

In justice to myself, Mr. Speaker, I have felt called upon to contradict a statement that I made, for I will not be put in a false position after I know the truth, even regarding a claim of my own State.

Now, it was stated in another place that these claims were equitable; that they were just and legal, as much so as any other claims in the bill, and I believe it, Mr. Speaker.

I believe that the claims of the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada stand upon exactly the same plane of law and equity that 99 per cent of the other claims do here. They have had the same careful consideration of Congress; they have had the same reports of committees, Mr. Speaker; yet it was stated that in view of the fact that they carried so much money they would have to let them out this time and take up about one-third of this bill and force it through Congress.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you object to this bill simply because that is not in?

Mr. LOUD. I do not object simply because that is not in, let me say, in answer to the gentleman from Georgia. Perhaps there are some things, Mr. Speaker, in the composition of some men that the gentleman does not understand. If this bill to-day carried the claims of the State of California, I should have opposed it just as I do now, and have repeatedly said so to my colleague, who with me has given these claims careful consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. What does this bill do with the claim of California?

Mr. LOUD. It drops the claims of California and of Oregon and sends the claim of Nevada to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Oregon claim is in the Court of Claims and pending there; the Nevada claim is sent to the accounting officers for investigation.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, may be it is. To illustrate, Mr. Speaker, let me say to this House it shows that these claims, which these very conferees at the other end of the Capitol say are as right and equitable as any, have never had a foundation even of equity, and to allow the same would necessarily establish the precedent of paying the many millions of bounty paid by all the States. Now, you can judge what equity the rest of these claims have.

Regarding the French spoliation claims, Mr. Speaker, I probably have as many constituents interested in those claims as any member on this floor. There was a time when I was led to believe that these claims were just and equitable. But any man who will read the veto message of Mr. Cleveland on the deficiency bill must necessarily come to the conclusion that these claims (I am referring now to the French spoliation claims), if they had ever had any equity, would have been determined in their day. Let me read a few words that this great man said on this question. [Cries of "Ah!" on the Democratic side.]

Oh, somebody says "Ah!" with reference to Grover Cleveland. Grover Cleveland had the courage of his convictions, which is a great factor in the making of a man in the world.

The bill appropriates $1,027,314.00 for a partial payment upon claims which originated in depredations upon our commerce by French cruisers and vessels during the closing years of the last century. They have become quite familiar to those having Congressional experience, as they have been pressed for recognition and payment, with occasional intervals of repose, for nearly one hundred years.

Then in another part of his message—and I commend it to this House, for the words must burn in your hearts and minds after you have cast your vote for this more than $3,000,000 of claims. Grover Cleveland had a wonderful faculty in expressing and clinching a point:

It is, I believe, somewhat the fashion in interested quarters to speak of the failure by the Government to pay these claims as such neglect as amounts to repudiation and a denial of justice to citizens who have suffered. Of course the original claimants have for years been beyond the reach of relief; but as their descendants—

Now, mark you well—as their descendants in each generation become more numerous the volume of advocacy, importunity, and accusation correspondingly increases.

Is not that true? How many times have you seen it here, as claims grow older they grow larger in amount. Now, let me call the attention of my Democratic friends to our fathers, for whom they profess so much reverence. Grover Cleveland says:

If injustice has been done in the refusal of these claims, it began early in the present century and may be charged against men then in public life more conversant than we can be with the facts involved, and whose honesty and sense of right ought to be secure from suspicion.

He is now referring to our fathers, and he says:

Whose honesty and sense of right ought to be secure from suspicion.

These claims never came before Congress until 1846, many years after those who were familiar with them had passed away; and now, after a hundred years have elapsed, they are brought before this Congress with all the sanctity of age. And we, in 1899, Mr. Speaker, must adopt them here, under whip and spur, perchance because there are some Southern claims in here in which members of Congress may possibly be interested through their constituents.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do you mean to say there are nothing but Southern claims in here?

Mr. LOUD. Oh, the gentleman wakes up once in a while, and catches a phrase I utter.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why, then, does the gentleman mention the South? Is it to prejudice that side of the House?

Mr. LOUD. I say that our Southern brethren seem to feel compelled to vote for claims in here because, perchance, they have some claims in which their constituents are interested.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MAHON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I did not care to occupy a moment of time in the discussion of this bill. I want to say that during the long session of this Congress we passed what was called the Bowman bill, being a bill providing for the payment of claims under the Bowman Act. This bill included all claims for stores and supplies furnished by loyal men to the Union Army, passed upon favorably by the Court of Claims and certified to Congress under the Bowman Act. No other claims were in the bill when it went to the Senate. The Senate amended it by adding claims favorably passed upon under the French spoliation act of $1,100,000.

They also added miscellaneous claims until an aggregate was reached of about nine millions and a half. The conferees were appointed, and we went to work last June with the Senate conferees. We have met since that time, while Congress was in session, about every other day. We have labored most assiduously to reduce the amount put upon it by the Senate amendments to our bill. We have succeeded after innumerable conferences in eliminating from the eight millions, in round numbers, put upon it by the Senate all except about one and one-half millions. In other words, the bill as now presented to Congress contains the House bill of $1,600,000, in round numbers, the Bowman Act cases, which have remained unpaid for thirty years and the justice of which has never been denied by any man in or out of Congress; also about one million of French spoliation claims and about $500,000 of miscellaneous claims. I do not want to discuss the French spoliation claims now. They are familiar to every member upon this floor. Some of these claims have been passed unanimously by former Congresses and have received the approval of the Chief Magistrates, and we have paid a million and a half or more since I have been in Congress.

The Senate insists that these claims ought to be paid, as the Bowman Act cases are paid. The House conferees accepted the French spoliation claims, and they are added to the bill. In addition to these two classes of claims there have been added by the Senate, as stated by me, about $500,000 of miscellaneous claims, every one of which has either been passed by the Senate or passed by the House of Representatives.

There is not a claim, in my judgment, of that class now in the bill that is not just and should not be allowed. The House conferees have given most earnest attention to each claim and examined the report upon each one of these miscellaneous claims. Many of them have been passed, either by the Senate or by the House, more than once. We eliminated every claim except those that have been passed from one to three times by the Senate or House.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have only five minutes.

Mr. LOUD. I will not take a minute. Does not the gentleman think the House is entitled to know what other claims which nobody knows anything about are in the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. They have been reported upon, and a list is furnished here that shows that every one of them has been considered carefully, scrutinized carefully, not only by the Committee on Claims in the Senate, but by the Committee on War Claims in the House; and they have been reported upon and passed unanimously by the House and the Senate at different times, some of them as many as three times. We have eliminated about six millions of the claims, and we believe this bill ought to pass in the shape it is in. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] objects to this bill, as I understand it, largely because the California claims are not in it.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is entirely wrong; he should have listened to my remarks. I said I would vote against the bill if the claims were in there.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I understand the gentleman objects to the bill on all grounds, and he would vote against it if the California claims were in it. I want to say that among the amendments put on the bill by the Senate were $3,900,000 for California. No gentleman from California in either House has urged us to include that claim in the bill, and it was eliminated.

Mr. DE VRIES. The gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken. Did not I ask the conferees to include the California claim in this bill if other State claims were included?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; the gentleman distinctly said that if the other State claims were included the claims of California should be included, and that he would insist upon it. I am not discounting that claim. I am not saying that it is not just. I say we eliminated all the State claims. The gentleman from Florida in the Senate, Mr. PASCO, had an amendment for over half a million dollars for his State, and though he was a conferee the Florida claim was eliminated that the bill might pass. There was a claim for the State of Oregon of a half a million, and that goes out, as it is in the Court of Claims.

There was a claim from my own State involving litigation between railroad companies; that has gone out of the bill. So that we have dealt fairly with all interests. We have left off all the State claims. We have presented a clean-cut bill, which it seems to me ought to commend itself to both sides of the House. About equal amounts go North and South. So that it is not a sectional bill. It is a bill which, it seems to me, if we intend to pay just claims at all, ought to commend itself to the membership of this body.

Mr. SETTLE. Will the gentleman kindly tell us why any judgments and findings of the Court of Claims were eliminated from the Senate amendment?

Mr. RICHARDSON. A few of those only were eliminated. It was insisted, if they went out of this bill, that they ought to be put upon some one of the general appropriation bills. One of them was a claim from Louisville, known as the Dennis claim.

Mr. SETTLE. What was the difference between them and the spoliation claims?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I can not say what the difference was, except that the spoliation claims were in a class by themselves, standing upon grounds familiar to us all, which I have not time to enter upon now. We thought that the miscellaneous claims, where there had been a finding by the Court of Claims, should be as far as possible put upon some one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. BRUCKER. The gentleman will allow me to ask him whether these French spoliation claims have ever been considered by a committee of this House?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir; considered by committees of this House, and passed by the House several times.

Mr. BRUCKER. In this Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; not in this Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have no harsh criticism to make upon the conferees. They entered upon the consideration of this bill, carrying about $10,000,000; and if anything is to be appropriated for claims of this kind, I think the conferees have acted fairly well, so far as I understand the report.

But I want to call the attention of the House now to the real character of this report; and I am compelled, let me say, to rely upon the statement of the managers, because I have not had the time to examine the items of the conference report itself. The report of the managers shows that the bill as it passed the House carried claims to the amount of $1,189,000, under the Bowman and Tucker acts. It further shows that the Senate amendment brings the total amount up to $9,030,456. The conferees have agreed to the amount of the original bill, $1,189,000. They have also agreed to $379,000 under the Bowman and Tucker acts. They have also agreed to $1,055,000 of what are known as French spoliation claims. They also include miscellaneous claims amounting to $482,802.05.

Mr. Speaker, we all understand the Bowman Act claims and the Tucker Act claims. We also understand the nature of the French spoliation claims. But in the limited time since the conference report was made I have been unable to examine the items of the miscellaneous class.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman state again the aggregate amount of the French spoliation claims as embraced in this report?

Mr. DOCKERY. One million and fifty-five thousand four hundred and seventy-three dollars.

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust the House will vote that down. There is not an honest dollar in it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to criticize the conferees. If the House intends to pass anything of this kind, I think the conferees have made a very short reduction of the original ten millions. I do not, however, desire this measure to pass, because we have not the money to pay the claims. There is one item particularly that should be rejected. I make no comment upon the miscellaneous claims the committee have reported, because I know nothing about them. They may all be meritorious. But I do know something, and the House knows something, about the $1,055,000 of French spoliation claims. They are more than one hundred years old. They are musty and stale with age. I desire to know whether this side of the House is willing to approve the payment of those claims at a time when we have expended of borrowed money $462,000,000.

During Mr. Cleveland's Administration the Government borrowed $262,000,000 by the issuance of bonds to maintain the gold standard. That has been expended.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask if the gentleman himself did not vote for the French spoliation claims in the Fifty-first Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think my friend is mistaken.

Mr. DOCKERY. Not at all. My friend is mistaken. No, Mr. Speaker; I have opposed them all the time. I stood then against the proposition for the payment of the French spoliation claims just as I stand now. And further, let me say to my friend from Tennessee that if we had a surplus in the Treasury of a billion of dollars, I should still oppose their payment.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me—because the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not allow time in opposition on this side—I only wish to express the hope that every Republican member on the floor of the House will vote down this proposition in this report.

Mr. GIBSON. And I hope every Republican member will vote it up.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a report that ought not to receive the support of any members on this floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. The responsibility, Mr. Speaker, rests with the Republican side of the House. You have 60 majority. You can vote it down if you will.

Mr. HOPKINS. And we are going to do it if you will stand with us.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think it will be voted down mainly on the ground, as the gentleman from Missouri knows, that these claims are now controlled largely by the insurance companies.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is not one of them in the hands of the insurance companies.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DOCKERY. Why, Mr. Speaker, I thought I had more time. The SPEAKER. The gentleman had five minutes granted to him, and that time has been exhausted.

Mr. DOCKERY. I only desired to fix the responsibility for the adoption of this report just where it belongs—on the other side.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, well, we will take the responsibility. The gentleman need not be uneasy.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the House will adopt the report of the conference committee. I hope, also, that every Republican member on this floor will vote for its adoption, as a matter of justice, right, and equity. I think it ought to be adopted—not from what I know with reference to the French spoliation claims, of which I know but little—but because of the justice of the other claims, so far as those which come under the provisions of the Bowman Act are concerned, and so far as other just claims against the Government are concerned. These claims have been asserted for many years, they have been referred to the tribunal selected by Congress for their consideration, namely, the Court of Claims, and they have received the approval of that tribunal. We can not afford to dispute the justice of claims thus adjudicated and returned to this body for payment. The mere fact, which has been asserted here, that the claims may be old ones, justifies no man, and can justify no government, in repudiating them. If they are old claims it is our fault and not that of the claimants.

These people have been seeking to get a settlement of their claims for many years. Particularly is this true in regard to the Bowman Act claims, to which I shall, in the main, address myself, leaving to other gentlemen the consideration of other questions involved in the report, to which I have not time now to refer. There are other claims in the bill probably as meritorious as the Bowman Act claims, which I am satisfied are as meritorious as any ever presented to Congress or the Government of the United States. Every just claim is entitled to consideration and payment. These are claims in behalf of loyal citizens, claims of Union men, who furnished to the Army, willingly or unwillingly, as the case might be, supplies that the Army needed and consumed—things that benefited the Army, things which our soldiers needed—and yet these claimants have had to wait over thirty-five years for a settlement of their claims.

Time was when Congress appropriated readily for the payment of men who had sacrificed or were compelled to give up their all for the benefit of the Government. Of late years these claims have been allowed to slumber, and notwithstanding the exertions of members at both ends of the Capitol, it has seemed impossible to get justice done. These are claims that belong to all sections of the country. They are in no sense sectional. These matters have been considered carefully by Congress, and they have been in the hands of careful, conscientious men at both ends of the Capitol, who, after a full and thorough consideration, have recommended their payment.

This committee, after laborious consideration and full investigation of the matter, have reported that these claimants are entitled to be paid, because based on justice and equity. It will not do to say that these matters have not been considered. We considered the Bowman Act claims in the House; the bill for their payment was passed almost unanimously by the House. The Senate added, after consideration, the French spoliation claims, as to the justice of which other gentlemen will speak. I have not time to refer to them now. But after more than six months of conscientious, careful, and laborious consideration we have this report of the conference committee submitted for our adoption. That committee was composed of men of intelligence, men of high character and standing, men who command the full respect of both the House and Senate, who have carefully investigated the question, and unanimously report the agreement now before us, and I can not stand here, Mr. Speaker, in justice to myself and in justice to what I believe to be the rights of these people, and ask a member of this body, whether a Republican or a Democrat or anybody else, to repudiate that report.

They have, I say, gone over the whole question. They have studied it carefully. As to the Bowman Act claims, they are backed by the almost unanimous vote of this House. As to the French spoliation claims, they are backed by the almost unanimous vote of the Senate; and I can not see why, under these circumstances, there should not be an acquiescence on the part of this House in the result which has been reached.

I shall not undertake to discuss more elaborately the justice of the Bowman Act claims. I have long labored for their payment, because I believe in the Government paying its debts. If the Government owes a debt, it stands as a matter of course, in my estimation, that the Government should pay it. But we do not rest in any doubt as to whether the Government owes these claims, because our own chosen tribunal, after careful investigation, has decided that the Government does owe them, and in each instance has fixed the amount of the indebtedness.

I therefore ask every member of the House to vote in favor of agreeing to the conference report as settling the question. The claims ought to be paid, and I do not suppose any man here wishes to stand for the repudiation of any honest obligation of the Government.

Mr. MAHON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the House passed a bill to pay for stores and supplies to loyal citizens, claims that had been passed upon by the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act. That was at the last session of Congress. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate amended with similar claims, swelling the amount of the bill as it passed the House from $1,100,000 to $1,500,000. I am informed, and after a pretty careful examination believe, that these Bowman Act cases are for stores and supplies. As an original question I did not favor them, and would not, as I said before. They had their day in court, but they came here, and under repeated legislation of the House have ripened into the kind of claims which I refer to.

Now, the Senate amended that bill by putting on the French spoliation claims of over a million dollars. I have, from Congress to Congress, with what little power I have, opposed those claims. I believed then and believe now that they ought never to have been paid. But the courts passed upon them. Congress has breathed into them the breath of life. The Fifty-first Congress appropriated for the payment of over a million dollars. This appropriation that is agreed to is substantially along the same line. And committed as we are by legislation and by findings of the courts, they will have to be paid at some time.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. Now, as to the miscellaneous claims of nearly half a million dollars, I have examined them hastily and believe they are the best of those claims of $9,000,000 put on by the Senate. I think the most of them are equitably and fairly due from the Government to its respective citizens. Some of them undoubtedly ought to go out, but nevertheless, as these matters go, it seems to me that as well as we can do is to adopt this conference report. Gentlemen understand that we have lost one or two general appropriation bills by the Senate putting these matters on them heretofore and adding to them two and three fold. That I have always opposed and always, I trust, will oppose. But here is a bill that comes from the Claims Committees of the two bodies and that has been agreed upon by the conferees of both Houses.

Now I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to ask the gentleman if the appropriations covered in this conference report covering the French spoliation claims discharge all the obligations of that character?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I suppose there are to be other findings. This, as I understand, discharges all that have been passed upon favorably by the courts.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. Do these French spoliation claims provided for in this bill include any claims of insurance companies or assignees?

Mr. CANNON. I am informed from every standpoint that they do not, and I believe they do not. I am quite content that this report should be adopted, because it embraces the most worthy of the $9,000,000 of claims that have been kicking back and forth between the two Houses, and when paid these claims can no longer be utilized by great blocks of Representatives and Senators, or by smaller blocks of Representatives and Senators, to pull through the other $8,000,000, nearly all of which, in my judgment, are thoroughly vicious, and ought not to be appropriated for. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I got?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, just one word. When the conference met, this bill made provision for over $9,000,000. The conferees on the part of the House for six long weeks were in conference on this measure. The private bills on here number 47. We struck about 150 private bills out of the bill as it came from the Senate, and the 47 allowed by this bill aggregate the sum of about $430,000. They have passed either or both Houses of Congress or have had favorable reports by committees of both Houses, and many of them have been recommended by the different departments. I want to assure this House that all claims like the Chouteau claim, or claims that have smoke on their garments, are not in this bill; but we have reported clean bills.

Now, as to the French spoliation claims. There is not an item in this bill that does not go to a man your court has found to be entitled to it. We have put a proviso in this bill providing that no claim hereby appropriated for that has been assigned to or is owned by any insurance company shall be paid, and the Secretary of the Treasury is prohibited from paying the same. So that we have provided that if two or three such claims should have gotten in through mistake they will not be paid.

Mr. HOPKINS. Have you fixed the bill so that other corporations or other speculators or lobbyists can not get them?

Mr. RICHARDSON. We have provided that they shall be paid to the legal representatives of the parties.

Mr. MAHON. These claims are to be paid to the administrators, and under an act of Congress where assignments were made in bankruptcy under the old law they are to go to the executor, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. We have followed the law exactly, providing for investigation of these claims.

Now, as to the merits of the French spoliation claims. I have given them a thorough study from beginning to end, and while my judgment is even a very feeble one, I think they ought to be paid. Some of the best men and the greatest statesmen we have had in this country—men like Clay, Webster, and Calhoun and other prominent men, coming down to the present day—who have examined these claims have held beyond all controversy that the United States Government should pay these claims.

Now, the time has gone by to settle this controversy forever. Congress referred all these claims to the Court of Claims, and they ascertained a very little over a million dollars of these claims, which were certified to and paid by the Fifty-first Congress; and from the Fifty-first Congress they have found a million more. I want to say to this House that the Court of Claims has never in its history passed a claim that was in the hands of insurance companies.

Mr. HOPKINS. You spoke about Webster, Clay, and Calhoun as great men who supported these claims. Is it not a fact that neither of these men ever convinced Congress that these were honest claims?

Mr. MAHON. I have heard the gentleman from Illinois before about these claims. Now, we have had an investigation made of them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him to ask him the names of the Presidents who have vetoed those claims?

Mr. MAHON. Now, as to the statement made by the gentleman from California. These French spoliation claims were put on the urgency deficiency bill in the Fifty-third Congress. It passed this House, I think, two days before the final adjournment and went to the President the day before the adjournment, or rather the night of the day before. That message was not written by President Cleveland. Who prepared it I know not. It is a paper full of misstatements and misstatement of facts. He says in his veto message that 132 of these claims were for insurance companies. It was written in a hurry. Whoever prepared it I know not, but very evidently the man who prepared it did so in a great hurry and did not know what he was talking or writing about.

As I have said, we have worked long and faithfully. I have not a claim in from my district, and the State claim has gone out. I went into the conference with clean skirts, not having a single item in from my State and district. So when I come here representing this bill to-day to you, and urging the payment of every item in it, it is not on the ground that I have any interest in it.

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the aggregate amount carried with the bill?

Mr. MAHON. Three million one hundred thousand dollars.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. LOUD. Division!

The House divided; and there were—yeas 135, nays 47.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska and Mr. DOCKERY. The yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER (after counting). Forty-seven gentlemen in the affirmative—a sufficient number—

Mr. MAHON. The other side.

The SPEAKER (after counting). One hundred and thirty-four—a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 132, nays 89, answered "present" 3, not voting 106; as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDING AT INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Mr. MERCER submitted a conference report; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 146) to provide for the erection of a public building at Indianapolis, Ind., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.
That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment of the House numbered 2, with an amendment as follows: In line 17 in said amendment strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the House agree to the same.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The House recedes from its amendment numbered 1, the effect of which is to increase the amount authorized by the act for the construction of said building from $1,200,000 to $1,500,000.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to House amendment numbered 2, and agrees to the same, the effect of which is to provide a new section to the act whereby the sale of the present post-office site is authorized, if deemed by the Secretary of the Treasury advisable, and the proceeds applied to the purchase of another site.

DAVID H. MERCER,
J. D. HICKS,
J. H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MERCER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MERCER. I desire to call up some other bills, that they may be sent to conference. On Senate bill 710 I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. On House bill 11882 I ask that the House disagree to the Senate amendments—

The SPEAKER. These matters must be taken one at a time. They require unanimous consent. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] has a conference report; and he is therefore recognized.

LUCRETIA C. WARING.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER submitted the following conference report; which was read:

The committee of conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 104) to increase the pension of Lucretia C. Waring, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TITLE TO LOTS 13 AND 14, SQUARE 950.

Mr. JENKINS submitted a conference report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 931) to confirm title to lots 13 and 14, in square 950, in Washington, D. C., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the proposed amendment, after the word "Yates," insert the words "his heirs and assigns forever;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN J. JENKINS,
CHARLES F. SPRAGUE,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
RICHARD R. KENNEY,
J. C. PRITCHARD,

The following statement of the House conferees was read:

The amendment of the Senate, which the House practically accepts, refers to the Secretary of the Interior the whole question of the sum that the claimant of the lots 13 and 14, in square 950, shall pay to the Government for those lots instead of authorizing the Secretary to quitclaim the title of the United States in them. Also it authorizes the Secretary of War to correct the records of that Department in the case of lots in the District of Columbia actually occupied for twenty years.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY, ETC.

Mr. FOSS. I desire to present a conference report on House bill 10403, to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement of the House conferees be read instead.

There was no objection.

The following statement of the House conferees was read:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10403) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States, submit the following statement to accompany the conference report:

Senate amendment No. 1, as agreed to in conference, is an immaterial one removing the exception of watch duty for certain engineer officers.

Senate amendment No. 2, as amended and agreed to in conference, strikes out the words "of infantry," so that the amendment provides that each rear-admiral embraced in the nine lower numbers of the grade shall receive the same pay and allowance as are now allowed a brigadier-general in the Army. The reason for striking out the words "of infantry" is simply because no such grade as brigadier-general of infantry exists in the Army.

Senate amendments Nos. 3 and 4, as amended and agreed to in conference, provide that when the office of chief of bureau is filled by an officer below the rank of rear-admiral, instead of commodore, he shall have the rank of rear-admiral, but receive only the pay and allowance allowed to a brigadier-general in the Army.

Senate amendments Nos. 5 and 6, as amended and agreed to in conference, provide that nothing shall prevent the retirement of those officers now holding the rank or relative rank of commodore, from retiring with the rank and pay of that grade. And further, the section is amended by striking out the word "with" in two places, whereby the expressions "with the relative rank of" and "with the rank of" are made to read "the relative rank of" and "the rank of," which corrects a misquotation of existing law.

Senate amendment No. 7, as amended and agreed to in conference, provides that civil engineers in the Navy, on the active list, under section 1413 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be appointed beyond the present number of twenty-one.

Senate amendment No. 8, as amended and agreed to in conference, provides that those officers who retire under this section shall have the rank and three-fourths the sea pay of the next higher grade, including the grade of commodore, as now existing, which is retained for purposes of retirement.

Senate amendment No. 9, as agreed to in conference, provides that the board of rear-admirals, who shall pass upon the retirement of officers, shall consist of five, instead of "not less than three nor more than five."

Senate amendments 10 and 11, as amended and agreed to in conference, provide that not less than four, instead of a majority of the board, shall agree upon their findings, and further, that officers retired under the provision of that section shall receive the rank and three-fourths the sea pay of the next higher grade, including the grade of commodore, retained for purposes of retirement.

Senate amendment No. 12 has been wholly receded from by Senate conferees. This was a provision permitting appointments by the President of ensigns in the line of the Navy, not to exceed 40 in all, from civil life.

Senate amendment No. 13, as amended and agreed to in conference, restores the House provision in reference to naval constructors and assistant naval constructors, with the proviso that the whole number of naval constructors and assistant naval constructors on the active list shall not exceed 40 in all.

Senate amendment No. 14, as agreed to in conference, which provided for the immediate commissioning of those naval cadets who have completed their four years' course at the Naval Academy, and who served at sea in the war with Spain, was receded from by the Senate conferees.

Senate amendment No. 15, providing for a judge-advocate corps in the Navy, was receded from by the House conferees.

Senate amendment No. 16, as amended and agreed to in conference, simply restores the original section 12 of the House bill and gives an officer of the Navy, with a creditable record, who served during the civil war, when retired the rank and three-fourths the sea pay of the next higher grade.

Senate amendments Nos. 17 and 18, providing for the abolition of the two years' sea course after the completion of the four years' course at the Naval Academy, were receded from by the House conferees, and said provisions are stricken from the bill.

Senate amendment No. 19 was agreed to in conference and was purely a formal amendment as to the renumbering of the section.

Senate amendment No. 20, as agreed to in conference, is a grammatical one, substituting the word "are" for "that."

Senate amendment No. 21, agreed to in conference, is simply the substitution of the word "section" for the word "law."

Senate amendment No. 22, as amended and agreed to in conference, substitutes for the pay section of the original bill the following:

"SEC. 13. That, after June 30, 1899, commissioned officers of the line of the Navy and of the medical and pay corps shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for the officers of corresponding rank in the Army: Provided, that such officers when on shore shall receive the allowance, but 15 per cent less pay than when on sea duty; but this provision shall not apply to warrant officers commissioned under section 12 of this act: Provided further, That when naval officers are detailed for shore duty beyond seas they shall receive the same pay and allowances as are or may be provided by or in pursuance of law for officers of the Army detailed for duty in similar places: Provided further, That naval chaplains who do not possess relative rank shall have the rank of lieutenant in the Navy; and that all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited for computing their pay with five years' service. And all provisions of law authorizing the distribution among captors of the whole or any portion of the proceeds of vessels or any property hereafter captured or condemned as prize or providing for the payment of bounty for the sinking or destruction of vessels of the enemy hereafter occurring in time of war are hereby repealed: And provided further, That no provision of this act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any commissioned officer now in the Navy, and in any case in which the pay of such an officer would otherwise be reduced he shall continue to receive pay according to existing law: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall operate to increase or reduce the pay of any officer now on the retired list of the Navy."

Senate amendment No. 23, as agreed to in conference, is purely formal, relating simply to the renumbering of the section.

Senate amendments Nos. 24 and 25, as agreed to in conference, provide that those machinists who are taken in from civil life shall not be above the age of 30 years.

Senate amendments Nos. 26, 27, and 28, as agreed to in conference, are purely formal and relate to the renumbering of the section.

Senate amendment No. 29, as agreed to in conference, strikes out the words "act as far as the Navy is concerned" and substitutes the word "section," and is purely a correction of language.

Senate amendment No. 30, as agreed to in conference, is purely formal and relates to the renumbering of the section.

Senate amendment No. 31, as agreed to in conference, inserts the word "Commandant," which was left out by mistake in the House bill.

Senate amendment No. 32, as agreed to in conference, substitutes the word "section" for the word "act."

Senate amendment No. 33, as agreed to in conference, is purely formal and relates to the renumbering of the section.

Senate amendments Nos. 34 and 35, as amended and agreed to in conference, abolish the provision for the transfer of men in the line to the Marine Corps and provide that the vacancies existing in the Marine Corps shall be filled by the President: first, from graduates of the Naval Academy; or second, from those who are serving or have served as second lieutenants in the war with Spain; or third, from meritorious noncommissioned officers; or fourth, from civil life. And further, that after the vacancies are once filled there shall be no more appointments from civil life.

Senate amendment No. 36, as agreed to in conference, relates purely to the renumbering of the section.

Senate amendment No. 37, as agreed to in conference, strikes out the exception as to officers transferred from the Navy, in order to make it correspond with the change made by Senate amendment No. 34.

Senate amendment No. 38, as agreed to in conference, provides for the substitution of the word "or" for the word "and," and is purely grammatical.

Senate amendment No. 39, as agreed to in conference, provides that those persons who shall be appointed to the Marine Corps from civil life shall not be under 20 or over 30 years of age, instead of under 20 or over 25, as contained in the House bill.

Senate amendment No. 40, as agreed to in conference, strikes out the words "and those transferred from the Navy to the Marine Corps," in order to correspond with previous provisions of the bill.

Senate amendments Nos. 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, and 47, as agreed to in conference, are purely formal and relate to the renumbering of the sections.

Senate amendment No. 43, as agreed to in conference, providing for the temporary rank of senior officers of marines of fleets or squadrons, is abolished.

Most of the Senate amendments agreed to by the House conferees were purely formal, immaterial, and inconsequential. All of the fundamental and important provisions of the House bill are retained, either in their original state or with slight modifications, and the amendment of the Senate permitting the appointment from civil life to the regular line of the Navy has been wholly abolished.

The expense covered by the bill as agreed to in conference will be materially reduced from that carried by the original bill as passed by the House.

GEO. EDMUND FOSS,
ALSTON G. DAYTON,
ADOLPH MEYER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FOSS. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the additional annual salary charge under this bill?

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman means the increased expense?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; the additional expense.

Mr. FOSS. Since the bill passed the House the amount involved has been reduced probably $150,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. I had understood the expense was estimated at about $2,100,000. Is that correct?

Mr. FOSS. That was the estimate when the bill passed the House. We have reduced that.

Mr. DOCKERY. That was the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. FOSS. Yes, sir; but we have reduced that probably to the extent of about $150,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then the gentleman means to say that the annual additional charge will be about $2,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. About $2,000,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Does that include any computation as to the increase which will result from the accumulated and more rapid retirements?

Mr. FOSS. Yes, I understand so.

Mr. BENNETT. This report makes no change in regard to the commanding officer of the Marine Corps?

Mr. FOSS. No change whatever. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOSS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BURTON. I move to suspend the rules and that the House shall nonconcur in all the amendments of the Senate to House bill 11795, commonly known as the river and harbor bill, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to inquire whether it is the unanimous instruction of the gentleman's committee that this motion be made?

Mr. BURTON. I know of no dissent in the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. And have all the members of the committee been consulted?

Mr. BURTON. I understand so.

Mr. BAILEY. My only anxiety is to ascertain whether the motion meets the approval of our political friends on the committee. If it does, I am content.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think I can state to my friend from Texas that it does.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules. Is a second demanded?

Mr. DOCKERY. For the purpose of permitting debate, I ask a second.

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is now open to debate. [A pause.]

Mr. BURTON. If no gentleman desires to debate the proposition, we are ready for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BURTON to suspend the rules, it was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BURTON, Mr. REEVES, and Mr. CATCHINGS as conferees on the part of the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CARROLLTON, KY.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2552) to set aside a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington for a public park.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, is not the bill which is now on the Speaker's table which was laid aside for engrossment in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is. Does the gentleman call it up?

Mr. BERRY. I do.

The SPEAKER. The following engrossed bill, on which the previous question was ordered, and with reference to which the full reading was demanded, is now laid before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1663) for the erection of a public building at Carrollton, Ky.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken, and the bill passed.

On motion of Mr. BERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THE CENSUS BILL.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report at this time. I submit the report of the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 11815) to provide for the taking of the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11815) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "That a census of the population, of deaths, and of the manufacturing, mechanical, and agricultural products of the United States shall be taken in the year 1900, and once every ten years thereafter.

"Sec. 2. That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a Census Office, the chief officer of which shall be denominated the Director of the Census. It shall be his duty to superintend and direct the taking of the Twelfth Census of the United States, in accordance with the laws relating thereto, and to perform such other duties as may be required of him by law. The Director of the Census shall be appointed, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive an annual salary of $6,000; and there shall also be an Assistant Director of the Census, to be appointed in like manner, who shall be an experienced practical statistician, and shall receive an annual salary of $4,000: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census.

"Sec. 3. That during the absence of the Director of the Census, or when the office of Director shall become vacant, the Assistant Director shall perform the duties of the Director.

"Sec. 4. That there shall also be in the Census Office, to be appointed by the Director thereof in the manner hereinafter specified, five chief statisticians, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, at an annual salary of $3,000 each; a chief clerk, one disbursing clerk, and one geographer, at an annual salary of $2,500 each; five expert chiefs of division and two stenographers, at an annual salary of $2,000 each; ten clerks of class 1, fifteen clerks of class 3, twenty clerks of class 2, and such number of clerks of class 1, and of clerks, copyists, computers, and skilled laborers, with salaries at the rate of not less than $800 nor more than $1,000 per annum, to be appointed from time to time, as may be found necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties herein required to be undertaken. The disbursing clerk herein provided for shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the Secretary of the Treasury in the sum of $50,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, quarter-yearly, of all moneys and properties which shall be received by him by virtue of his office, with sureties to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

"The Director of the Census may also appoint 1 captain of the watch, at a salary of $540 per annum; 2 messengers, and such number of watchmen, assistant messengers, and laborers, at salaries of $600 each per annum; messenger boys, at salaries of $400 each per annum; and charwomen, at salaries of $240 each per annum, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 5. That the chief clerk and the chief statisticians provided for in section 4 of this act, and all other employees authorized by this act below the Assistant Director of the Census, shall be appointed by the Director of the Census, subject to such examination as said Director may prescribe: Provided, That no examination shall be required in the case of enumerators or special agents, nor of employees below the grade of skilled laborers at $800 per annum. And provided further, That employees in the existing branches of the departmental service, whose services may be specially desired by the Director of the Census, not exceeding 6 in all, may be transferred without examination, and at the end of such service the employees so transferred shall be eligible to appointment in any Department without additional examination, when vacancies exist.

"Sec. 6. That the collection of the information required by this act shall be made, under the direction of the Director of the Census, by supervisors, enumerators, and special agents, as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 7. That the Twelfth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to the population, to mortality, to the products of agriculture, and of manufacturing and mechanical establishments. The schedules relating to the population shall comprehend for each inhabitant the name, age, color, sex, conjugal condition, place of birth, and place of birth of parents, whether alien or naturalized, number of years in the United States, occupation, months unemployed, literacy, school attendance, and ownership of farms and homes; and the Director of the Census may use his discretion as to the construction and form and number of inquiries necessary to secure information under the topics aforesaid. The mortality schedules shall comprehend for each decedent the name, sex, color, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, and birthplace of parents, occupation, cause and date of death, and, if born within the census year, the date of birth. The form and arrangement of the schedule and the specific questions necessary to secure the information required shall be in the discretion of the Director. The schedules relating to agriculture shall comprehend the following topics: Name of occupant of each farm, color of occupant, tenure, acreage, value of farm and improvements, acreage of different products, quantity and value of products, and number and value of live stock.

"All questions as to quantity and value of crops shall relate to the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration. The specific form and division of inquiries necessary to secure information under the foregoing topics shall be in the discretion of the Director of the Census. The schedules of inquiries relating to the products of manufacturing and mechanical establishments shall embrace the name and location of each establishment; character of organization, whether individual, cooperative, or other form; date of commencement of operations; character of business or kind of goods manufactured; amount of capital invested; number of proprietors, firm members, copartners, or officers, and the amount of their salaries; number of employees, and the amount of their wages; quantity and cost of materials used in manufactures; amount of miscellaneous expenses; quantity and value of products; time in operation during the census year; character and quantity of power used, and character and number of machines employed. The form and subdivision of inquiries necessary to secure the information under the foregoing topics relating to manufacturing and mechanical industries shall be in the discretion of the Director of the Census. The information collected shall be of and for the fiscal year of such corporations or establishments having its termination nearest to and preceding the 1st of June, 1900.

"Whenever he shall deem it expedient, the Director of the Census may withhold the schedules for said manufacturing and mechanical statistics from the enumerators of the several subdivisions in any or all cases, and may charge the collection of these statistics upon special agents, to be employed without respect to locality. In cities or States where an official registration of deaths is maintained the Director of the Census may, in his discretion, withhold the mortality schedule from the several enumerators within such cities or States, and may obtain the information required by this act through official records, paying therefor such sum of money as may be found necessary, not exceeding 2 cents for each death thus returned. The Director of the Census is also authorized and directed to make suitable provisions for the enumeration of the population and products of Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands, for which purpose he may employ supervisors and enumerators or special agents, as he may deem necessary.

"The only volumes that shall be prepared and published in connection with the Twelfth Census, except the special reports hereinafter provided for, shall relate to population, mortality and vital statistics, the products of agriculture, and of manufacturing and mechanical establishments, as above mentioned, and shall be designated as and constitute the census reports, which said reports shall be published not later than the 1st day of July, 1902. The report upon population shall include a series of separate tables for each State, giving by counties the number of male persons below and above the age of 21 years, their color, whether native or foreign born, whether naturalized or not, and their literacy or illiteracy. All terms expressing weight, measure, distance, or value shall be expressed in the terms of the English language as spoken in this country.

"Sec. 8. That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to special classes, including the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind; to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to deaths and births in registration areas; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone and telegraph business; to transportation by water, express business, and street railways; to mines, mining and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold, in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry; Provided, That the reports herein authorized relating to mines, mining, and minerals shall be published on or before July 1, A. D. 1903.

"And the Director of the Census shall prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall in his judgment be best adapted to elicit the information required under these subjects, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end. For the purpose of securing the statistics required by this section, the Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided. The statistics of deaths and births provided for in this section shall be obtained from, and restricted to, the registration records of such States and municipalities as possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, in the discretion of the Director, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 2 cents for each birth or death reported. The statistics of special classes, and of crime, pauperism, and benevolence specified in this section shall be restricted to institutions containing such classes: Provided, That at the time of the census enumeration the data relating to these classes may, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, be collected by the enumerators of such institutions, who shall receive compensation therefor at rates not exceeding, in per capita districts, 5 cents for each name enumerated and returned. The collection of statistics authorized by this section shall be made at such time or times and in such manner as will not interfere with nor delay the rapid completion of the census reports provided for in section 7 of this act, and all reports prepared under the provisions of this section shall be designated as 'Special Reports of the Census Office.'

"Sec. 9. That the Director of the Census shall, at least six months prior to the date fixed for commencing the enumeration at the Twelfth and each succeeding decennial census, designate the number, whether one or more, of supervisors of census to be appointed within each State and Territory, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and the Hawaiian Islands, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the whole number of such supervisors shall not exceed 300: And provided further, That wherever practicable and desirable the boundaries of the supervisors' districts shall conform to the boundaries of Congressional districts.

"Sec. 10. That each supervisor of census shall be charged with the performance within his own district of the following duties: To consult with the Director of the Census in regard to the division of his district into subdivisions most convenient for the purpose of the enumeration, which subdivisions shall be declared and the boundaries thereof fixed by the Director of the Census; to designate to the Director suitable persons, and, with the consent of the Director, to employ such persons as enumerators within his district, one or more for each subdivision and resident therein; but in case it shall occur in any enumeration district that no person qualified to perform and willing to undertake the duties of enumerator resides in that subdivision the supervisor may employ any fit person to be the enumerator of that subdivision; to communicate to enumerators the necessary instructions and directions relating to their duties; to examine and scrutinize the returns of the enumerators, and in event of discrepancy; or deficiencies appearing in the returns for his district, to use all diligence in causing the same to be corrected and supplied; to forward to the Director of the Census the completed returns for his district in such time and manner as shall be prescribed by the said Director, and to make up and forward to the Director the accounts required for ascertaining the amount of compensation due to each enumerator in his district, which accounts shall be duly sworn to by the enumerator, and the same shall be certified as true and correct, if so found, by the supervisor, and said accounts so sworn to and certified shall be accepted by the said Director, and payment shall be made thereon by draft in favor of each enumerator.

"The duties imposed upon the supervisor by this act shall be performed, in any and all particulars, in accordance with the instructions and directions of the Director of the Census: Provided, That if the supervisor of any district has not been appointed and qualified on the thirtieth day preceding the date fixed for the commencement of the enumeration, the Director of the Census may appoint a special agent, who shall be a resident of the same district, to perform the work of subdivision into enumeration districts: And provided, That any supervisor who may abandon, neglect, or improperly perform the duties required of him by this act may be removed by the Director of the Census, and any vacancy thus caused or otherwise occurring during the progress of the enumeration may be filled by the Director of the Census.

"Sec. 11. That each supervisor of census shall, upon the completion of his duties to the satisfaction of the Director of the Census, receive the sum of $125, and in addition thereto, in thickly settled districts, $1 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated in such district, and in sparsely settled districts $1.40 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated in such district; such sums to be in full compensation for all services rendered and expenses incurred by him, except that in serious emergencies arising during the progress of the enumeration in his district, or in connection with the reenumeration of any subdivision, he may, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, be allowed actual and necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $5 per day during his necessary absence from his usual place of residence, and that an appropriate allowance for clerk hire may be made when deemed necessary by the Director of the Census: Provided, That in the aggregate no supervisor shall be paid less than the sum of $1,000. The designation of the compensation per thousand, as provided in this section, shall be made by the Director of the Census at least one month in advance of the date fixed for the commencement of the enumeration.

"Sec. 12. That each enumerator shall be charged with the collection, in his subdivision, of facts and statistics required by the population schedule, and such other schedules as the Director of the Census may determine shall be used by him in connection with the census, as provided in section 7 of this act. It shall be the duty of each enumerator to visit personally each dwelling house in his subdivision, and each family therein, and each individual living out of a family in any place of abode, and by inquiry made of the head of each family, or of the member thereof deemed most credible and worthy of trust, or of such individual living out of a family, to obtain each and every item of information and all particulars required by this act as of date June 1 of the year in which the enumeration shall be made. And in case no person shall be found at the usual place of abode of such family, or individual living out of a family, competent to answer the inquiries made in compliance with the requirements of this act, then it shall be lawful for the enumerator to obtain the required information, as nearly as may be practicable, from the family or families or person or persons living nearest to such place of abode; and it shall be the duty of each enumerator to forward the original schedules, duly certified, to the supervisor of census of his district as his returns under the provisions of this act; and in the event of discrepancies or deficiencies being discovered in his said returns he shall use all diligence in correcting or supplying the same.

"In case the subdivision assigned to any enumerator embraces all or any part of any incorporated borough, village, town, or city, and also other territory not included within the limits of such incorporated borough, village, town, or city, or either, it shall be the duty of the enumerator of such subdivision to clearly and plainly distinguish and separate, upon the population schedules, the inhabitants of all or any part of such borough, village, town, or city as may be embraced in the subdivision assigned to such enumerator from the inhabitants of the territory not included therein. No enumerator shall be deemed qualified to enter upon his duties until he has received from the supervisor of census of the district to which he belongs a commission, under his hand, authorizing him to perform the duties of an enumerator, and setting forth the boundaries of the subdivision within which such duties are to be performed by him.

"Sec. 13. That the subdivision assigned to any enumerator shall not exceed 4,000 inhabitants, as near as may be, according to estimates based on the preceding census or other reliable information, and the boundaries of all subdivisions shall be clearly described by civil divisions, rivers, roads, public surveys, or other easily distinguished lines: Provided, That enumerators may be assigned for the special enumeration of institutions, when desirable, without reference to the number of inmates.

"Sec. 14. That any supervisor of census may, with the approval of the Director of the Census, remove any enumerator in his district and fill the vacancy thus caused or otherwise occurring. Whenever it shall appear that any portion of the enumeration and census provided for in this act has been negligently or improperly taken, and is by reason thereof incomplete or erroneous, the Director of the Census may cause such incomplete and unsatisfactory enumeration and census to be amended and made anew under such methods as may, in his discretion, be practicable.

"Sec. 15. That the Director of the Census may authorize and direct supervisors of census to employ interpreters to assist the enumerators of their respective districts in the enumeration of persons not speaking the English language. The compensation of such interpreters shall be fixed by the Director of the Census in advance, and shall not exceed $4 per day for each day actually and necessarily employed.

"Sec. 16. That the compensation of the enumerators shall be ascertained and fixed by the Director of the Census as follows: In subdivisions where he shall deem such allowance sufficient, an allowance of not less than 2 nor more than 3 cents for each living inhabitant and for each death reported; not less than 15 nor more than 20 cents for each farm; and not less than 20 nor more than 30 cents for each establishment of productive industry enumerated and returned may be given in full compensation for all services. For all other subdivisions per diem rates shall be fixed by the Director of the Census according to the difficulty of enumeration, having reference to the nature of the region to be canvassed and the density or sparseness of settlement, or other considerations pertinent thereto; but the compensation allowed to any enumerator in any such district shall not be less than $3 nor more than $6 per day of ten hours' actual field work each. The subdivisions to which the several rates of compensation shall apply shall be designated by the Director of the Census at least two weeks in advance of the enumeration. No claim for mileage or traveling expenses shall be allowed any enumerator in either class of subdivisions, except in extreme cases, and then only when authority has been previously granted by the Director of the Census, and the decision of the Director as to the amount due any enumerator shall be final.

"SEC. 17. That the special agents appointed under the provisions of this act shall have equal authority with the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act, and shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from their usual place of residence: And provided further, That no pay or allowance in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed special agents when employed in the Census Office on other than the special work committed to them, and no appointments of special agents shall be made for clerical work.

"SEC. 18. That no supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, interpreter, or special agent shall enter upon his duties until he has taken and subscribed to an oath or affirmation, to be prescribed by the Director of the Census; and no supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, or special agent shall be accompanied by or assisted in the performance of his duties by any person not duly appointed as an officer or employee of the Census Office, and to whom an oath or affirmation has not been duly administered. All appointees and employees provided for in this act shall be appointed or employed, and if examined, so examined, as the case may be, solely with reference to their fitness to perform the duties herein provided to be by such employee or appointee performed, and without reference to their political party affiliations.

"SEC. 19. That the enumeration of the population required by this act shall commence on the 1st day of June, 1900, and on the 1st day of June of the year in which each succeeding enumeration shall be made, and be taken as of that date. And it shall be the duty of each enumerator to complete the enumeration of his district and to prepare the returns hereinbefore required to be made, and to forward the same to the supervisor of census of his district, on or before the last day of July in such year: Provided, That in any city having 8,000 inhabitants or more under the preceding census the enumeration of the population shall be taken and completed within two weeks from the 1st day of June as aforesaid.

"SEC. 20. That if any person shall receive or secure to himself any fee, reward, or compensation as a consideration for the appointment or employment of any person as enumerator or clerk or other employee, or shall in any way receive or secure to himself any part of the compensation provided in this act for the services of any enumerator or clerk or other employee, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $3,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 21. That any supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, interpreter, special agent or other employee, who, having taken and subscribed the oath of office required by this act, shall, without justifiable cause, neglect or refuse to perform the duties enjoined on him by this act, or shall, without the authority of the Director of the Census, communicate to any person not authorized to receive the same any information gained by him in the performance of his duties, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $500; or if he shall willfully and knowingly swear or affirm falsely, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years and be fined not exceeding $900; or if he shall willfully and knowingly make a false certificate or a fictitious return, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction of either of the last-named offenses he shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

"SEC. 22. That each and every person more than 20 years of age belonging to any family residing in any enumeration district or subdivision, and in case of the absence of the heads and other members of any such family, then any representative of such family, shall be, and each of them hereby is, required, if thereto requested by the Director, supervisor, or enumerator, to render a true account to the best of his or her knowledge, of every person belonging to such family in the various particulars required, and whoever shall willfully fail or refuse to render such true account shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100. And every president, treasurer, secretary, director, agent, or other officer of every corporation, and every establishment of productive industry, whether conducted as a corporate body, limited liability company, or by private individuals, from which answers to any of the schedules, inquiries, or statistical interrogatories provided for by this act are herein required, who shall, if thereto requested by the Director, supervisor, enumerator, or special agent, willfully neglect or refuse to give true and complete answers to any inquiries authorized by this act, or shall willfully give false information, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $10,000, to which may be added imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year.

"SEC. 23. That all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment or information in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 24. That the Director of the Census may authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for the traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Census Office and the incidental expenses essential to the carrying out of this act, as herein provided for, and not otherwise, including the rental of sufficient quarters in the District of Columbia and the furnishing thereof and the maintenance of the printing outfit in the Census Office.

"SEC. 25. That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to print and bind in the Census Office such blanks, circulars, envelopes, and other items as may be necessary; and to print, publish, and distribute from time to time bulletins and reports of the preliminary and other results of the various investigations required by this act.

"SEC. 26. That in case the Director of the Census deems it expedient he may contract for the use of electrical or mechanical devices for tabulating purposes: Provided, That in such case due notice shall be given to the public, and no system of tabulation shall be adopted until after a practical test of its merits in competition with other systems which may be offered.

"SEC. 27. That all mail matter, of whatever class, relative to the census and addressed to the Census Office, the Director of the Census, Assistant Director, chief clerk, supervisors, enumerators, or special agents, and indorsed 'Official business, Department of the Interior, Census Office,' shall be transmitted free of postage, and by registered mail if necessary, and so marked: Provided, That if any person shall make use of such indorsement to avoid the payment of postage or registry fee on his or her private letter, package, or other matter in the mail the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 28. That the Secretary of the Interior, on request of the Director of the Census, is hereby authorized to call upon any other department or office of the Government for information pertinent to the work herein provided for.

"SEC. 29. That such records, books, and files as relate to preceding censuses, and the printing-office outfit used in the Eleventh Census, and such furniture and property of whatever nature used at the Eleventh Census as may be necessary in conducting the work of the Census Office and can be spared from present uses, shall be transferred to the custody and control of the Census Office created by this act. The said furniture and property shall be inventoried by the proper officers of the Department of the Interior when such transfer is made, and a copy of the inventory filed and preserved in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Director of the Census.

"SEC. 32. That for the organization and equipment of the Census Office to perform the preparatory work necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, the sum of $1,000,000, to be available on the passage of this act, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to continue available until exhausted. Of said appropriation such amount as may be considered by the Director of the Census to be necessary for immediate preliminary printing may be expended under the direction of the Public Printer. And the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury, on or before October 1, 1899, further estimates for the work herein provided for.

"SEC. 33. That the act entitled 'An act to provide for the taking of the Eleventh and subsequent censuses,' approved March 1, 1880, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And agree to the same.

A. J. HOPKINS.
CHARLES A. RUSSELL.
MARION DE VRIES.

Now, the bill as reported by the committee of conference is substantially the House bill with these modifications. Most of the changes are of slight importance. It will be remembered, however, that the House bill provided for a separate Bureau of the Census. The conference report provides a separate bureau in effect, but makes it a department of the Interior Department, so that the Secretary of the Interior is the chief officer of it. But the Director of the Census has full control of the Bureau and of the appointments of the employees and others.

Under the Senate bill 800 supervisors appointed for taking the census were to be appointed by the President without the consent and approval of the Senate. The Senate conferees insisted on the Senate amendment which provides that these appointments shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Aside from these changes the balance of the modifications are purely formal, and the text of the House bill is practically the bill reported now in the conference report.

Mr. DALZELL. Is there any change in the provision of the House bill relating to the taking of statistics as to mines and mining?

Mr. HOPKINS. There is not.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the appropriation carried in the bill? Mr. HOPKINS. One million dollars—the same amount that was provided in the House bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. What provision is made as to the appointments? Are they under the civil service?

Mr. HOPKINS. The appointments are not under the civil service, but it is provided that aside from the enumerators and special agents the appointments must be made on merit, and that the appointees must first pass an examination provided for by the Director of the Census.

Mr. BROSIUS. The examinations are under the control of the Director?

Mr. HOPKINS. They are under the control of the Director. The language is substantially the language of the House bill.

Mr. BROSIUS. Such examinations as he shall direct?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. HANDY. These examinations are entirely noncompetitive, are they not?

Mr. HOPKINS. They are supposed to be noncompetitive, but will be of a character that will insure the highest degree of merit and efficiency.

Mr. HANDY. The starch is all washed out of the civil-service provision, is it not?

Mr. STEELE. I hope so.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I do not know about the starch.

Mr. SULZER. And the Republicans will get all the places.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all. There is no politics in this, and I will say that this report meets with the full approval of the Democratic members of the conference committee. After looking the bills over they preferred the House suggestion to the amendment that was originally adopted by the Senate.

Mr. HANDY. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that it is not at all true that the Republicans will get all of these appointments?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, this bill is not a partisan bill in any sense of the word.

Mr. HANDY. Not the bill, but will not the appointments be partisan appointments?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think not. I think efficiency will be the qualification, and that alone. I do not think the politics of the applicant will cut any figure.

Mr. DALZELL. If efficiency is to be the test, do you not think Republicans will get the offices anyway? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. My individual judgment is that on that ground Republicans would get the larger number of appointments.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does not the gentleman think that under that proviso of the agreement that gives the Senate the right of confirmation as to supervisors the chances are that the Senate will have the advantage as to that particular class of appointees over the House of Representatives?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think not. We found on examination that all of the previous census bills had provided for confirmation of supervisors by the Senate, and it being an unbroken practice, they were unwilling to yield, and we felt that in the interest of the public service we had better agree to the Senate amendment in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions to be asked, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will have the conference report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the conference report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the conference report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, I ask for a vote on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, there is upon the Calendar of Unfinished Business House bill 1055, to amend section 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which amendment relates to the payment of shares of the soldiers' pensions to the wives of soldiers in cases where the husbands have deserted the wives. We presented a conference report which was agreed to. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to. On reflection and examination of the matter I am satisfied that that motion to reconsider ought to prevail. We want a further conference, so as to perfect the bill and remove all objections and all questions of interpretation. The bill should pass, but it is better to perfect it now than by subsequent legislation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] has made valuable suggestions.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the conference report was agreed to be vacated, and that the bill be sent back to a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1055) to amend section 4766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York if that is a report from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; it was reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It relates to the payment to the wife of a soldier when the soldier deserts her of a part of the pension the soldier husband draws.

The SPEAKER. There was a conference, the conference report was agreed to, a motion to reconsider was entered, and the gentleman from New York now asks unanimous consent that the vote may be reconsidered, and that the bill may go back to conference.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the purpose of the bill? Is it to pension the deserted wife rather than the deserting husband?

Mr. RAY of New York. To pay a part of the pension to the deserted wife, when she is needy, instead of paying it all to the deserting husband.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it ought to be paid to the wife, if he leaves her without good reason.

Mr. RAY of New York. We will do all the good we can.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman says he is satisfied it ought to be reconsidered. I wish he would state some good reason why it should be done. I am in the dark about the matter.

Mr. RAY of New York. The trouble arises out of a certain Senate amendment which they put on, providing for the payment of two-thirds of the pension to the wife where the soldier deserts her and is in a National Home. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] is thoroughly conversant with these matters, being a manager of the Soldiers' Homes, and he thinks that the conference report, as we agreed to it, might work some hardship. He has had a conference with some of the Senators on the subject, and I have had a conference with the committee of the Senate, and we desire to take it back and remove all objections.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. As I understand the conference report, it provides for the payment of two-thirds of the pension to the wife.

Mr. RAY of New York. Where the soldier goes into a National Home.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. That part of it you want to amend by your conference?

Mr. RAY of New York. We want to amend that, and possibly some other portions of it. We want to insert also a proviso that the wife when deserted shall be in needy circumstances. It is thought best by some gentlemen to do that.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like a little more information about this matter before I give unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I will state to my colleague that this bill provides that the fact that a soldier is in a Home shall be prima facie evidence he has deserted his wife, whether he be in a State or National Home.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Which is wrong.

Mr. STEELE. That is what we want to have corrected; and another thing, the managers of the Homes already provide that when men go into a National Home, where they have a wife that is worthy, two-thirds of the pension shall be given to her. Now, this arrangement makes it incumbent upon the treasurer of the Homes to find out whether the wives of the soldiers at the Homes are worthy of any portion of the pension, which would be impossible for him to do. Therefore we ask to have it go back to conference, so that that trouble might be eliminated.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I have no objection to it going back to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to is agreed to; the House further insists on its disagreement and asks a further conference. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. STEELE, and Mr. DRIGGS.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill S. 2552—the one that was laid before the House a few minutes ago.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2552) to set aside a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park.

Be it enacted, etc., That all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land lying and being in the State of Washington, and within the boundaries particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point 3 miles east of the northeast corner of township No. 17 north, of range 6 east of the Willamette meridian; thence south through the central parts of townships Nos. 17, 16, and 15 north, of range 7 east of the Willamette meridian, 18 miles more or less, subject to the proper easterly or westerly offsets, to a point 3 miles east of the northeast corner of township No. 14 north, of range 6 east of the Willamette meridian; thence east on the township line between townships Nos. 14 and 15 north, 18 miles more or less to a point 3 miles west of the northeast corner of township 14 north, of range 10 east of the Willamette meridian; thence northerly, subject to the proper easterly or westerly offsets, 18 miles more or less, to a point 3 miles west of the northeast corner of township No. 17 north, of range 10 east of the Willamette meridian (but in locating said easterly boundary, wherever the summit of the Cascade Mountains is sharply and well defined, the said line shall follow the said summit, where the said summit line bears west of the easterly line as herein determined); thence westerly along the township line between said townships Nos. 17 and 18 to the place of beginning, the same being a portion of the lands which were reserved from entry or settlement and set aside as a public reservation by proclamation of the President on the 20th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1893, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and seventeenth, are hereby dedicated and set apart as a public park, to be known and designated as the Washington National Park, for the benefit and enjoyment of the people; and all persons who shall locate or settle upon or occupy the same, or any part thereof, except as hereafter provided, shall be considered trespassers and be removed therefrom.

SEC. 2. That said public park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be to make and publish, as soon as practicable, such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonders within said park, and their retention in their natural condition. The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant parcels of ground at such places in said park as shall require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors; all of the proceeds of said leases, and all other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with said park, to be expended under his direction in the management of the same, and the construction of roads and bridge paths therein.

And through the lands of the Pacific Forest Reserve adjoining said park rights of way are hereby granted, under such restrictions and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may establish, to any railway or tramway company or companies, through the lands of said Pacific Forest Reserve, and also into said park hereby created, for the purpose of building, constructing, and operating a railway, constructing and operating a railway or tramway line or lines, through said lands, also into said park. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within said park, and against their capture or destruction for the purposes of merchandise or profit. He shall also cause all persons trespassing upon the same after the passage of this act to be removed therefrom, and generally shall be authorized to take all such measures as shall be necessary to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. That upon execution and filing with the Secretary of the Interior, by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, of proper deed releasing and conveying to the United States the lands in the reservation hereby created, also the lands in the Pacific Forest Reserve which have been heretofore granted by the United States to said company, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, and which lie opposite said company's constructed road, said company is hereby authorized to select an equal quantity of nonmineral public land, so classified as nonmineral at the time of actual Government survey, which has been or shall be made, of the United States not reserved and to which no adverse right or claim shall have attached or have been initiated at the time of the making of such selection, lying within any State into or through which the railroad of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company runs, to the extent of the lands so relinquished and released to the United States.

SEC. 4. That upon the filing by the said railroad company at the local land office of the land district in which any tract of land selected and the payment of the fees prescribed by law in analogous cases, and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause to be executed, in due form of law, and deliver to said company, a patent of the United States conveying to it the lands so selected. In case the tract so selected shall at the time of selection be unsurveyed, the list filed by the company at the local land office shall describe such tract in such manner as to designate the same with a reasonable degree of certainty; and within the period of three months after the lands including such tract shall have been surveyed and the plats thereof filed by said local land office, a new selection list shall be filed by said company, describing such tract according to such survey; and in case such tract, as originally selected and described in the list filed in the local land office, shall not precisely conform with the lines of the official survey, the said company shall be permitted to describe such tract anew, so as to secure such conformity.

SEC. 5. That the mineral-land laws of the United States are hereby extended to the lands lying within the said reserve and said park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope we will have an explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to move two amendments to the bill before I make a statement. I move to add the following proviso to section 3. I will pass it up to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 3 the following proviso:
"Provided, That any settlers on lands in said national park may relinquish their rights thereto and take other public lands in lieu thereof, to the same extent and under the same limitations and conditions as are provided by law for forest reserves and national parks."

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to further amend, in line 21, page 2, by striking out the word "Washington" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Mount Ranier;" so as to name the park Mount Ranier instead of Washington.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended. There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REISSUE OF A LOST CHECK.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11803) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by H. C. Newcomer, captain of engineers, in favor of Stone & Stansell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that H. C. Newcomer, captain of engineers at Memphis, Tenn., on December 5, 1898, did issue a check, No. 381741, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, to the order of Stone & Stansell, for the sum of $3,811.02, being in part payment under a contract for levee construction and retained percentage, Lower Yazoo district, improving Mississippi River; and

Whereas said check was subsequently lost in transmission through the mails to New York, and the amount thereof has never been received by said Stone & Stansell or their assigns; and

Whereas the provisions of the act of February 16, 1885, amending section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing United States disbursing officers and agents to issue duplicates of lost checks, apply only to checks drawn for $2,500 or less: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That said H. C. Newcomer, captain of engineers, be, and is hereby, instructed to issue a duplicate of said original check to Stone & Stansell, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment as have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue of duplicate checks under the provisions of section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. This is a bill to authorize the reissuance of a lost check, and is recommended by the Treasury Department.

Mr. LOUD. How large a check?

Mr. ALLEN. Three thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. COX. I would like to hear some statement about this.

Mr. ALLEN. It is simply to authorize the issue of a check in place of a lost check; it is recommended by the Treasury Department. They recognize the check has been lost and never paid, and it is simply to reissue a check under a bond, and with all the safeguards about it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being read the third time, it was passed.

DAVID M'MURTRIE GREGG.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1747) authorizing the President to appoint and retire David McMurtrie Gregg, late captain, Sixth United States Cavalry, and late brevet major-general of United States Volunteers, with the rank and grade of captain.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I shall not object if I can have an opportunity to discuss the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I did not wish to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee, and the bill is no longer before the House.

WILLIAM H. FORE.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4510) to correct the military record of William H. Fore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to correct the military record of William H. Fore, a private in Battery M, in the Second Missouri Light Artillery Volunteers, by removing therefrom the charge of desertion, and substitute therefor the following, to wit: "May 13, 1864, being under 15 years of age, absented himself without proper authority, and returned to his home, and was detained there by his parents until February, 1865, when he went to Illinois, and on February 11, 1865, enlisted in Company C, in the One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, under the name of James Keeney, alias James H. Keeney, and served faithfully to September 16, 1865, when he was honorably discharged the service." Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall accrue to him by virtue of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAND. This bill passed the Senate and is favorably reported to the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. If I can have a chance to debate this bill, I will not object. I wish to make some remarks in the House, as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the right to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will not interfere with this bill.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I have got to interfere with some bill, as I understand we are not going into Committee of the Whole again during this session. I would like to use about an hour in making some remarks upon what I think is for the benefit of the public service, with all the privileges allowed in debate when the House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the right to extend my remarks in the RECORD, as there are some tables that I want to introduce.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he can ask unanimous consent to deliver such a speech as he desires. I think some time between this and the close of the session he can get the permission. Personally I should be glad to see him do it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Massachusetts does not object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House as in Committee of the Whole for one hour—

Mr. HILL. I object, Mr. Speaker, unless I can have twenty minutes.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Well, I have no objection to that.

Mr. BAILEY. I should not object to that provided I can have some intimation of the subject upon which the gentleman desires to address the House. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts desires to discuss the currency.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Yes; I have served ten years on the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I have occupied very little time of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. And besides, the gentleman from Massachusetts is not going to serve much longer.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will let this bill go through.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts wishes to address the House upon great public measures that will result in great public good, and I do not see why the gentleman from Connecticut should impose any condition.

Mr. HILL. There has been no opportunity for discussing the currency question before this House. If the currency question pure and simple was to be discussed, I should not ask for time, but I do ask, in case an hour is granted to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that I shall be allowed one-half of that time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have twenty minutes also. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. I want twenty minutes, too.

The SPEAKER. The House will at once see the difficulty—

Mr. LOUD. I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask that at the option of the Speaker—

Mr. BLAND. The bill which I wish to bring up by unanimous consent is for a very deserving soldier.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] is withdrawn.

Mr. COX. I have heard both of these men until I am tired, and I make objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill presented by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. TALBERT. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask, as this is a bill for the removal of the charge of desertion, whether it contains the usual provision that the passage of the bill shall carry no pay or emoluments?

Several MEMBERS. That is in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is such a provision in the bill.

Mr. TALBERT. If the bill is simply to remove the stigma from the soldier's record, I make no objection; but we do not want, in the passage of this bill, to vote the soldier any money.

Mr. LOUD. This bill sets forth a great many things, as the House must have observed by the reading. It does not alone remove the charge of desertion, but goes on to state the time that the soldier served, etc. I think we should have the report read. It is an extraordinary bill.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. BELKNAP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4510) to correct the military record of William H. Fore, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Senate report is hereto attached, which report your committee approves and adopts.

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4510) to correct the military record of William H. Fore, have duly considered the same and submit the following report:

The facts in this case, clearly established by the records of the War Department, copy hereto attached, and by the petition of this soldier and the affidavits of Richard M. Huckly, W. M. Fore, Baby Fore, his mother, and John Earp, are that this soldier was born June 22, 1849, and, without the consent or permission or knowledge of his father and mother, or either of them, ran away from his home in Phelps County, Mo., and enlisted as a private in Battery M, Second Missouri Light Artillery Volunteers, on March 22, 1864, for three years, and served faithfully till May 13, 1864, when, being under 15 years of age, and becoming homesick, he left his company in St. Louis, Mo., and without proper authority went to Phelps County, Mo., to see his father and mother.

When he arrived at his home his father and mother detained him and would not allow him to return to his company until February, 1863. Then his father and mother gave him permission to go to Illinois under promise to them to seek work there and not to go into the Army. On his arrival there he again entered the Army; and, to avoid detection of his identity, under the assumed name of James Keeney, alias James H. Keeney, he enlisted and was duly mustered into the service on February 11, 1863, in Company C of the One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and served faithfully until September 16, 1865, when he was honorably discharged the service. Having absented himself from his battery company in St. Louis, Mo., on May 13, 1864, without proper authority, and never having returned to his company, he was charged as a deserter.

No application to remove such charge has been made to the War Department, and, as shown by the War Department record, that Department has no authority under the law of March 2, 1889, the only law now in force governing that Department in regard to removal of charges of desertion, to correct his record. His case is exceptional, and no authority exists, aside from legislation by Congress, to correct his record to correspond with the established facts. The bill proposes to grant this authority, which is only just and proper, and is reported back to the Senate and its passage recommended.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, this soldier, when he enlisted, was as old as I was when I entered the service, and I think I understood what desertion meant. He made two enlistments at a time when large bounties were paid. There is nothing in the report to show whether he received these large bounties; but as these enlistments took place in 1864 and 1865, when most if not all of the States were paying large bounties, it must be assumed that he received such bounties and that in making two enlistments he "doubled up" on the bounties.

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman will allow me this suggestion: There is no presumption of law that a man did anything wrong. To do what the gentleman from California surmises this man did would be entirely wrong, and I think in the absence of proof the gentleman should not assume that the soldier did a wrongful act.

Mr. LOUD. If bounties were given and he accepted the bounty, perhaps at the time he did so it was not a wrongful act; but that he did accept the bounty, if one was given, I do not think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] will controvert. Nearly every State in the Union was giving large bounties at that time, and if bounties were given in that State this young man evidently has received two bounties.

Mr. BLAND. I do not think that is so.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems that he was only 15 years of age.

Mr. LOUD. I say again that I was but 15 years of age when I entered the Army. But I knew what enlistment meant. So does every young man 15 years of age. The bill is wrong in its form at any rate.

Mr. BLAND. The bill passed the Senate in its present shape.

Mr. LOUD. That does not help it.

Mr. BLAND. There may be some surplusage in the bill; but that amounts to nothing. The bill has been favorably reported in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I agreed not to object. I shall vote against the bill. It ought not to pass; but I will not assume the responsibility of defeating it by an objection. It is not as bad as the omnibus claims bill. [Laughter.]

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO STATES FOR WAR EXPENSES.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the report of the committee of conferences on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 5260) to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read instead of the conference report.

Mr. LOUD. What is this bill?

Mr. MAHON. It is a bill to reimburse the States for expenses of putting volunteers into the service during the late war. This is a conference report.

Mr. LOUD. The fact that it has passed the Senate does not give it much standing.

Mr. MAHON. I have not said anything in that regard. I say this is a conference report on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen in the House must not comment on the proceedings of any other body.

Mr. LOUD. The comment was made by some gentleman on the other side—to the effect that the Senate had agreed to this conference report.

The SPEAKER. It is not permissible in the House to comment upon the action of another body. Is there objection to dispensing with reading the conference report, and reading instead the statement of the House conferees?

There was no objection.

The statement was read, as follows:

The substitute of the House to the Senate bill was amended in conference, as follows:

Wherever the words "and paid" appeared in the House substitute they were stricken out and the word "incurred" is used instead of "incurred and paid."

In the House substitute the word "Militia" was used in some parts of the bill, and at other places "National Guard." The bill as amended in conference reads "National Guard, or Militia, or Naval Reserve."

The House substitute provided that the officers and men should receive the same pay from the date of their enrollment until they were mustered into the United States service as the officers and men of the Regular Army. The bill as amended in conference provides that in the States and Territories where the pay of National Guards, of militia, or Naval Reserves is fixed by law, the same shall be paid to the officers and men, and in States where there is no law providing for the payment of the same the officers shall receive the same pay as officers in the Regular Army of the same rank and the men $1 per day, and the money must be paid by the States and Territories direct to the officers and men, and no part to be covered into the treasury of the State or Territory.

Section 4 was reconstructed so as to provide more definitely for the means of certifying up and settling accounts contracted but not yet paid.

THAD. M. MAHON.
T. OTJEN.
S. B. COOPER.

Mr. MAHON. I ask the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. SWANSON. Before that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MAHON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SWANSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this report changes the provision that enables payment to the State of Virginia?

Mr. MAHON. Provision is made that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a settlement with all the States for expenses incurred in the war.

Mr. SWANSON. The House amendment provided for the payment of Virginia and South Carolina and other States—

Mr. MAHON. I will state to the gentleman that they are all included.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if this report provides for the payment of the expenses incurred between the enlistment and the mustering in of the troops?

Mr. MAHON. Yes; it provides for the payment of the whole expense incurred.

Mr. McEWAN. And covers the expenses of all of the States?

Mr. MAHON. All of them are included. There are no exceptions made.

I ask the adoption of the report.

The report was considered and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER, YANKTON, S. DAK.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill. I call up the bill (S. 5258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at the city of Yankton, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. KNOWLES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS, ENROLLING ROOM.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk. This is necessary, I will state, in the closing hours of the session.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint two additional clerks for said committee, to be paid at the rate of $6 per day out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. LOUD. For how long a time?

Mr. GROUT. This session will terminate in a day or two, and they can be appointed only for that time, I take it.

Mr. HAGER. The intention is that they shall be employed only during the present session.

Mr. LOUD. In that event I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and to suspend the rules and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules and to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill H. R. 12203 and pass the bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. ALLEN rose.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object unless I can have certain time for speaking.

Mr. ALLEN. If we can have some agreement—

Mr. CANNON. Let the tellers take their places then.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not object to a second being considered as ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman across the aisle objected.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I will withdraw my objection if I can have an hour.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand a second?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Oh, no.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. ALLEN. I demand a second, and am willing that it be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I desire to address the House for an hour, in doing what I think is a public duty. If I can have that, I will not object to anything.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The tellers will take their places. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will act as tellers. Those in favor of ordering a second will pass between the tellers.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think it can be adjusted without taking the time of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois whether we could not agree on an hour on a side.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 4.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think under the rules this bill should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think no quorum voted, but I have never obstructed anything in this House in the whole ten years in which I have served here.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and a second is ordered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] are entitled to twenty minutes each.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to ask unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent that an hour on a side be given for debate on this proposition, instead of the usual twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the debate be extended to one hour on either side. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, if he desires twenty minutes, he is on the committee and on the subcommittee that prepared the bill, and I suggest to the gentleman that he go on and occupy his twenty minutes, and I feel quite sure that at the end of that time the House will hear him further, if he has not concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago I heard some gentleman, I believe it was the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, say in a speech on this floor, that while we attached a great deal of importance to what we said here, that really our speeches and predictions would soon be forgotten and that the Government would go on about the same as if we had not spoken.

Now, if I believed this, I think I would refrain from what I am about to say and would not speak at all. [Laughter.] And while I admit what the gentleman says may be true of the speeches of the average member of this House, yet I speak with the confident expectation that a hundred years from now, when questions of war and expansion agitate this country, as they do to-day, the statesmen of that day will search with eagerness the musty volumes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Fifty-fifth Congress to ascertain what the views of the Hon. JOHN M. ALLEN were on those questions a hundred years before. [Laughter.] And, sir, for this reason I am unwilling that this momentous session should close without putting into the RECORD something of my conclusions about present conditions.

Mr. Speaker, it has only been a short time since there was something of a contest on this floor as to who was entitled to the credit for the war in which we have recently been and, I believe, are still engaged.

Gentlemen on the other side of the House claimed it was to be, and was, a "Republican war," and some gentlemen on this side were contending for an interest in it. So far as I am concerned, I want to quitclaim my interest in it to the Republicans. [Laughter.] I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am as proud as anybody of the great achievements of our Navy and our armies; but I am very much afraid that when it is all over, if it ever is, and we take account of stock that we will find we have paid in sacrifices and money for a great deal more than we have got.

For myself, I want to say I did not want the war. I had had some experience in war, and I was very reluctant to see my country engaged in another one unless it was necessary. I confess that when it became inevitable, I voted for every proposition necessary to make it a success, not because I wanted the war, but because I wanted my country to be victorious in any war in which it might be engaged.

We went into it for the purpose, as we all understood, of freeing Cuba from the cruel and corrupt domination of Spain, and with the avowed statement that we were not seeking conquest or territorial acquisition.

If our declarations were then honest, somehow or other our purposes seem to have been diverted, and it came to be a war of conquest and territorial expansion. To have accomplished the purposes for which we avowed we began the war would not have involved a very great expenditure of money or a great sacrifice of the lives of our gallant soldiers. The expulsion of the Spanish army and Spanish authority from the island of Cuba—the thing we understood we were going to war for—has been accomplished sometime ago, and yet we still have the war going on and demands are made on us for a large army and great expenditure of money, which none of us contemplated when the trouble with Spain began. Some one is entitled to whatever credit there is in this condition and somebody must bear the responsibility. For myself, I do not claim any of the credit, and I repudiate the responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I have been making some figures as to the cost of this war. You know our friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is about to retire from Congress, and it is necessary that some one else should be put in training as the Democratic statistician. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is to figures on appropriation bills what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is to figures in a national campaign. [Laughter.] Mr. DOCKERY's retirement, which we all regret, has forced me into training as his successor.

I now submit the following figures, which will show the amount appropriated by this Congress directly chargeable to this war:

Last session .....	$361,859,927.26
This session .....	120,702,156.21
Total .....	482,562,083.47

This shows appropriations already made, and I confidently predict that at the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress this will have to be supplemented by a deficiency of more than $30,000,000 for war purposes if the Army authorized by the Army bill passed at this session of Congress is filled up. In this I do not count many expenditures made possible and claimed to be necessary on account of the war, nor much of extravagance in appropriations growing out of the expenditure of these immense sums of money. Nor does it take into account the untold millions that are to be spent in the years to come in maintaining our authority in our acquired possessions and in paying pensions to the soldiers who have been and will be engaged in this war and their families and dependants.

This latter charge will go on, if we are to judge the future by the past, through the lives of our children and our grandchildren, and how long this war with the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands is to go on, and what its consequences and cost will be, we have no power of computing. When you add to this the valuable lives that have been and may yet be sacrificed, the diseases that have been and that are yet to be contracted, and the sufferings that have been and are yet to be endured by our brave soldiers, and the vexing governmental problems growing out of our acquisition of territory, I confess that I am not vying with the Republican party as to whose war this is.

So far as the fighting is concerned it has been done by Democrats and Republicans. But the credit for the departure from the purposes for which the war was begun I am willing for the Republican party and the Republican Administration to have. While I do not know what the future policy of the Administration with reference to Cuba is—let it be what it may—we could probably successfully deal with the problems in Cuba and Porto Rico, as they are close to us, but they present many difficulties about the satisfactory solution of which I confess I have grave doubts; but we have acquired by treaty some islands—nobody seems to know how many—probably between 500 and 1,200, 10,000 miles away from us, inhabited by 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 people made up of different races, none of them homogeneous to us, unacquainted with and incapable of appreciating our institutions and our Government, not speaking our language and now resorting to war rather than submit to our authority and dominion over them.

They are composed of Negritos, Malays, Visayas, Moros, Igorotes, scattered tribes, Spanish Mestizos, Chinese, Chinese Mestizos, with all sorts of religions—Pagan, Mohammedan, Catholic, Buddhist—many of whom our laws prohibit from emigrating to this country, much less becoming citizens of it. What our future policy toward these people is to be no one seems to know or dares to predict; with reference to these people no one seems to know where "we are at" or where we are going. The President, in his speech at the Home Market Club in Boston the other day, said:

The Philippines, like Cuba and Porto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust we have not sought. It is a trust from which we will not flinch.

He further says:

Our concern was not for territory, or trade, or empire, but for the people whose interest and destiny, without our willing it, had been put in our hands.

I heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] here the other day, in his speech in reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], speaking on this subject insisting on the moral obligation of this Government, not only to take care of itself and its own people but to look out for the interests of the human race in general. I have heard a good many other expressions on this floor and elsewhere about our acquisition of the Philippine Islands, and our conduct toward the people of those islands being the result of manifest destiny and under direction of Divine Providence.

Mr. Speaker, while I am personally a very sentimental man, in matters of government my ideas are exceedingly practical. I believe it to be the highest duty of this Government to look out for its own welfare and that of its own people, and I deny any moral obligation upon the part of this Government to imperil or jeopardize the interest of either in pursuance of any supposed manifest destiny or supposed direction of Providence in looking out for humanity generally. We are too apt to conclude that destiny and Providence are directing us where we want to go.

A great many great mistakes and some crimes have been committed under what was claimed to be the direction of Providence. I have seen the criminal stand at the bar of justice and claim that his crime was committed under the direction of Providence. Do not understand me as ridiculing or treating lightly the earnest prayers with which the good implore the guidance of an all-wise Providence.

But we all know that a great many people hide behind Providential instructions as an excuse for the things they have made up their minds to do. You all remember the story of the old dorky who when asked if he believed in special Providence in answer to prayer, replied that it depended altogether on the wording of the "pra'r," and he gave as an illustration of his faith that his neighbor had some good fat turkeys. He said he might pray all night for one of those turkeys to be sent him, but the turkey would never come, but if he prayed to be sent after one of those turkeys the turkey would be there before morning. [Laughter.]

I heard of an instance down in Mississippi where a gentleman had loaned his minister some money for which he held his note. This was prior to the civil war. The war came on. He refused to accept Confederate money in payment of the note, and there was nothing else to pay with. After the war was over, most of the property had been destroyed, and the interest had been running on this note all through the war.

It was the custom down there to knock off the interest and compromise the principal; but this old gentleman insisted his preacher should pay the principal and interest. The stewards of the church called on the brother to remonstrate with him and to insist that he should at least forgive the preacher the interest. Finally, when persuasion had failed, they insisted he should pray over the matter and ask the Lord for guidance. He agreed to this and went off, got down on his knees by a log, and seemed to pray long and earnestly. He finally returned to the stewards with the statement that the Lord said He thought he ought to have his interest. [Laughter.]

Now, we are all sure that he had no such direction from the Lord; but his direction came from his own promptings; he wanted his interest.

I am free to confess that Providence has given me no instructions about the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, and I know of no one here whom Providence would be more likely to communicate with. [Laughter.]

The President says: "Our concern was not for territory, trade, or empire, but for the people." Now, Mr. Speaker, from my standpoint of statesmanship, if I could be convinced that it would be a good thing both for this country and the Filipinos for us to annex them and we could do so without breaking faith, I would be in favor of their annexation and I would not be so very squeamish about the consent of the governed. The memory of my having to accept government without my consent under the persuasive influence of several of you gentlemen I see around me [laughter] is a little too fresh in my mind for me to realize the absolute necessity of having the consent of the governed. [Laughter.]

Understand, I am not complaining about this; I am merely stating a fact. I am one of those who believe that the civilization as represented by the white man is not under any moral obligation to procure the consent to govern barbarous or uncivilized people who stand in the way of civilization and progress. This Government has wrestled with the Indian problem for many years, and it has been a very difficult problem of solution. I served for twelve years on the Indian Committee in this House and gave much attention to the problem. I have listened to much sentimental talk as to how we had robbed and outraged the Indians, and there has been much to excite sympathy in connection with their history.

But when I look over this great country of ours, with its teeming population and its millions of happy Christian homes, I say this 75,000,000 of civilized people were under no moral obligation to the 500,000 Indians our forefathers found roaming over this country to permit them to remain in uninterrupted possession of this beautiful land. If wrong was done, the benefits accruing to humanity and civilization a million times outweigh it. They have been driven back; their numbers have been reduced by half; their territory very much circumscribed, and we yet have the Indian problem with us, and are spending about $9,000,000 a year for their support and education.

This Government has been wrestling with this problem for more than a century and yet it is far from being solved. I do not lie awake at nights with a troubled conscience on account of the white man's treatment of the Indian, but any man will lie awake who undertakes the solution of what is best to do with them and how best to treat them.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think we need the Philippine Islands in our business. If they are capable of self-government they should be permitted to govern themselves. If they are not capable of self-government I do not want this Government to undertake to govern them. I am a great believer in our Government. I take great pride in it. I want it by its splendid example to hold aloft the torchlight of liberty, that other people and other nations may see, admire, and embrace freedom for themselves.

But I do not believe in the process of coercing people either into freedom or Christianity. I insist that we have, by this Administration in its treaty with Spain, been forced into a position of great embarrassment. While we are partisans in dealing with domestic questions, we all want to hold up the hands of the Administration in all outside complications; and the consequence is that we are forced to vote men and money for carrying on a war in the Philippine Islands that we do not think we ever should have had.

We are sending our young men into a climate to which they are unaccustomed, a climate full of disease and death to the unacclimated; the wet and sickly season is now approaching; many of these troops will never return alive; many who do return will come back physical wrecks. We have the example of Spain before us. She sent her armies there and a very large per cent thereof were the victims of that inhospitable climate. And, Mr. Speaker, what are we to get for all these sacrifices and all this expense.

There are no commercial advantages in prospect that I can see to compensate us; it is not a country or climate where any considerable number of white men will ever want to make their home, and even if it were, we have enough undeveloped territory in our own country to occupy the time, energies, and capital of all the people we have who want to engage in developing a country. We hear a great deal said now about taking up "the white man's burden," which is interpreted to mean the white man's assuming the burden of governing and preparing for self-government the dark man.

This may be an inviting prospect to those of you who are out looking for burdens [laughter], but as for myself and those I represent, we have had up the white man's burden for many years and we have got just all of it we want. Those of you who think that it is an easy matter to prepare an inferior race for self-government have read the history of the efforts to prepare the dark man for self-government to but little purpose. We have troubles enough of that sort in the limits of our own country.

The white people of my own State to-day are voluntarily submitting to the most onerous taxation for the purpose of educating another race up to the capacity for self-government, and notwithstanding the sacrifices they are making, the progress is almost, if not wholly, imperceptible. No, Mr. Speaker, we are not hunting any more burdens; we have troubles of our own, without going 10,000 miles away from home to look up others of the same kind. If these people are incapable of self-government, how do we propose to govern them? It must be either by the military or carpet-bag governments.

We have had in my section experiences with both, and God forbid that we should ever undertake to inflict any other people with either. I do not think I am pessimistic by nature, but I am very much impressed with the dangers that threaten us growing out of this particular policy of expansion. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] likened the Government to an individual. Have you not known many men, in the conduct of their business affairs, who while they kept their business in hand and kept in those lines they understood did well and prospered, but who lost their heads and began to "plunge," and you have noticed that most of the plungers go to pieces.

Our Government was getting along fairly well in governing its own people, but with plenty of difficulties at home to tax the wisest statesmanship, but like the business man who loses his head, our Government has now embarked on a "plunging" experience. I hope it may all turn out for the best, but I have serious fears as to the result. We have all heard many a time of the individual who did well and prospered by attending to his own business. This is no less true of governments than of individuals. If it should turn out well, those who are responsible for this policy are entitled to the credit. If it should turn out disastrously, the responsibility therefor is on them.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that the war was a godsend to the Republican party, so far as the last election is concerned. Every promise made by them in the last Presidential campaign had been violated. Their specious and delusive pretenses as to the restoration of silver by international agreement had been demonstrated to be false; the tariff bill that they passed under the pretense of raising revenue had developed, as we said it would, to be a bill to increase the burdens of taxation on the people and decrease the revenues of the Government.

The effect of what is known as the Dingley bill, that it was claimed was intended to supply the Government with revenue, resulted in decreasing the customs revenues of the Government for the first twelve months as compared with the last twelve months of the Wilson bill by $13,146,337, and has resulted in putting almost every commodity manufactured in this country into a trust. While the customs revenues have shriveled, the trusts have gone, like the Republican party, on a wild and riotous career of expansion.

But, fortunately for temporary advantage for the Republican party, war came on; the people's minds were distracted from economic questions; we passed the war-revenue bill, and by selling bonds and putting the people to licking revenue stamps you have managed to supply the Treasury temporarily with money. But mark my prediction, the people are going to get tired paying interest on bonds and licking stamps and go to licking the Republican party. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I noticed a few days ago that the late Republican Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who was recently elected by the pretended Republican majority as Senator from West Virginia, said, in a speech at a banquet in New York the other night that the income from customs duties would continue to fall off, and that hereafter internal revenues would have to be mainly relied upon to supply the funds needed for the conduct of the Government. While this is true, our Republican friends fail and refuse to take any steps to clear away the hindrances under the decision of the Supreme Court to the enactment of an income-tax law.

If we could have had a properly adjusted income tax the amount that could have been derived from the incomes that have been made by the organization of trusts within the last year would have gone a long way toward paying the expense of the war. But it does not suit the purpose of the Republican party to tax incomes, except to tax them for contributions with which to run their campaigns. When the war-tax bill was passed we thought they were going to make the corporations pay a part of it; when they put a tax on telegraph messages and express receipts we thought it was contemplated that the telegraph and express companies should pay these taxes; but it soon developed that the sender of the message or express package was required to pay the tax.

I remember to have gone last session to some of the leading Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee and tried to get them to amend the law so that these taxes should be paid by the corporations and not their patrons. They said it was too late in the session to get anything through, but I notice this session has come and is about gone and no effort has been made by that committee to correct this wrong. I notice the President, in his Boston banquet speech, heretofore referred to, in felicitating himself and the Republican party on the good conditions they had brought about, said:

We have made progress in industry and realized the prosperity for which we have been striving.

I am free to admit that in some portions of the country business conditions have improved; but I deny that Republican policies have brought this improvement. The most of the world had a failure of grain crops and the United States had an abundant harvest. The result was that we had a demand at good prices for our surplus grain, which resulted in great benefit to the grain growers, and resulted also in giving us a very large balance of trade in our favor, which brought much money to this country, helped the transportation companies and business generally. For this the Republican party is not entitled to the credit, unless they have been helping Providence control the seasons.

Then the lavish expenditures of money by the Government on account of the war has stimulated business in many lines and localities, but these are expenses the people will have to meet finally by taxation.

But, Mr. Speaker, in my section of the country, where most of the cotton of the world is produced, we did not profit by the failure of grain crops abroad, and our people, who have sold most of their last crop of cotton at about 4 cents, have not, as the President says, achieved that prosperity for which they are striving. I am not prepared to fully appreciate the felicity of the President on their prosperous condition.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the appropriations made by this Congress, which will aggregate, including contracts authorized to be made in appropriation bills, nearly $1,640,000,000. Take from this the $70,000,000 of contracts provided for and hereafter to be appropriated for will leave of direct appropriations made by this Congress the enormous sum of about $1,570,000,000. It is difficult for the mind to contemplate this enormous sum of money. The country stood aghast when the Republicans in the Fifty-first Congress ran the appropriations up to about a billion of dollars, and the people drove that party out of power partly on account of its extravagance. What will the people do when they read the record of the Fifty-fifth Congress, which more than half-way doubles the appropriations of the Fifty-first Congress?

Notwithstanding this Administration came into power and found there a surplus of more than $200,000,000 left by Mr. Cleveland as a result of the sale of bonds with which to buy gold, and notwithstanding the high rate of taxation under the Dingley bill and the great amount of revenue being derived from the war-revenue bill and the sale of $200,000,000 of bonds by this Administration, we are fast approaching an empty Treasury, that will necessitate the sale of more bonds. The American people may stand this, but I do not believe they will.

I want to call attention to the progressive extravagance of the Republican party. I knew they were expansionists when it came to spending money, but it is interesting as well as discouraging to note how rapidly the Government expenditures expanded under what is usually termed the "fostering care of the Republican party." In the year 1860, the year before the Republican party first came into power, the total expenditures of the Government were $63,130,598.39. This, I believe, was independent of the revenues derived from the postal service and expended for that service.

I will pass over the war period necessitating large expenditures. In 1870 the expenditures were $309,653,560.75. In 1875 there was appropriated $325,066,791.89, and in 1876, $328,128,190.32, making the total appropriations by the Forty-third Congress $653,704,991.21. The next, the Forty-fourth Congress, was Democratic, and it appropriated for 1877 $299,591,138.07, and in 1878, $296,006,694.21, making for that Congress $595,597,832.28, showing a difference in favor of Democratic economy over Republican extravagance of nearly $58,000,000 in the two years.

Now let it be borne in mind that it is very much easier to practice economy before extravagance has begun than it is to return to economical methods after an era of extravagance has once been inaugurated, and a glance at the appropriations by the various Congresses will show that most of the large increases have been under Republican Congresses, until the Fifty-first Congress, which was Republican, ran the appropriations up into the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000.

This was a record breaker, but it has gone on from bad to worse since that time, and the last, the Fifty-fourth Congress, appropriated $1,044,580,273.87, and now comes the Fifty-fifth Congress and breaks all records and makes appropriations that will aggregate close to $1,570,000,000.

The entire money of all descriptions in the United States, according to the Government estimates, which I think are extravagant, amounted on the 1st day of last month to $1,918,260,557. From this it will be seen from the appropriations already made that the Government will within two years expend within about $350,000,000—a sum equal to the entire circulation of money in the country. Mr. Speaker, these figures are absolutely appalling.

While the population of the country has but little more than doubled in the last forty years, the governmental expenditures have become about eleven times as great as they were then.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I will ask that the gentleman have five minutes more if he so desires.

Mr. ALLEN. I will not occupy further time upon this bill, but if I can have five minutes I will devote it to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). Consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, there appeared a few days ago in the Washington Post a column article headed "In JOHN ALLEN's town—A Washington young lady tells about Tupelo, Miss." This communication reflects on the town of Tupelo, and is not altogether complimentary to me. [Laughter.]

While it purports to be written by a young lady, I do not believe it was a young lady who wrote it. I think it most probable that the article was manufactured in the office of the Washington Post, and was inspired by a feeling of jealousy [laughter] which sometimes actuates that paper. The Post for a long time was given to making flings at Philadelphia; then it began to pick at New York [laughter]; you have noticed more lately it has been casting slurs at Chicago. Thus it is taking up the cities that outrival Washington and is attempting to do them up. They seem now to have begun on Tupelo. [Laughter and applause.]

I want to quiet the jealous fears of the Post. We are not contemplating any effort to move the capital to Tupelo, however advantageous it might be to the capital. [Laughter.] My judgment is this communication reflecting on Tupelo was written by a man, and the pretense of its being a young lady is to prevent me from denouncing the author for the misstatements contained in the article in as severe language as is common in high Army circles. I would not only locate the offense in the heart and throat and hair of the man who would write such a thing about Tupelo, but I would locate it in his solar plexus, in his diaphragm, and in his appendix. [Laughter.]

I want to now give some of the evidences that convince me that no young lady wrote this communication. The writer of the communication claims to have arrived at the Union Station in Tupelo at 4 o'clock in the morning [laughter], and says, "I was almost dying for a drink of water." He, she, or it then proceeds to describe the cup used for drinking purposes in the station, and says it was "the most impossible little tin cup I ever saw; it was incrustated with what seemed centuries of rust, leaked like a sieve, and held about a tablespoonful. I wiped off a place near the handle, gulped down the beverage, and declared myself satisfied."

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all know that no young lady has any such seal-brown thirst as that at 4 o'clock in the morning. Young ladies do not indulge in the practices that produce these early morning thirsts.

Another reason that satisfies my mind that no young lady wrote the article is that it speaks of my being so fresh when I first came to Washington. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that no young lady remembers back to the time when JOHN ALLEN was fresh. [Laughter and applause.]

So many people have asked me about this communication and its inspiration that I thought it best to expose what I believe were the motives that prompted it and to free all the young ladies of Washington from the suspicion that any of them had written it.

If it be possible, however, for me to be mistaken in my diagnosis of this matter, and the thing was really written by a young lady, I am at a loss to understand the animus which prompted this attack upon my town and myself unless it might possibly grow out of the fact that, being a very orderly and well-regulated married man, I have been forced to decline the attentions of some young ladies, and may have, for this reason, incurred some enmities.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You speak of your "town;" you mean your city?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; of course, my city. It is not, however, a city yet according to the census returns; but, Mr. Speaker, there is more room to build there, more room for growth in Tupelo than there is in the city of New York. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I accept the kind offer of the gentleman from Illinois, in order to ask the House to extend my time for five minutes longer by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a further extension of five minutes be accorded to him?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, it has been alleged, and the idea exists in the public mind, that the $20,000,000 which was to be paid to Spain under the treaty was purchase money for the Philippine Islands. I have taken a little pains and some trouble to get together the facts in consecutive order by dates relative to the negotiations pending between the American and Spanish commissioners, from the beginning to the close of their negotiations, which will show that this $20,000,000 was not paid for the Philippine Islands at all, but it was paid in closing the negotiations that began in a discussion as to how much of the debt of Cuba, amounting to some $500,000,000, should be assumed by the United States or by the island of Cuba when it should form a government of its own.

At the time of offering the $20,000,000 by the American commissioners not an article of the treaty had been agreed to. The various propositions had been discussed and assented to conditionally, dependent on a final agreement as to the whole treaty. The negotiations had reached a point at the time of this offer where there was serious doubt whether any treaty would be signed by both commissions. That this was the case I quote the following from a speech of Senator GRAY, one of the American commissioners, made by him in New York at the banquet of the Ohio society February 25, 1899:

There came a time in the course of those negotiations—and this, perhaps, is one of the secrets to which your president alluded—when, after four or five weeks of doubt and anxiety, it became apparent that these negotiations must either be broken off and your commissioners return without a treaty at all, and that we would be relegated to the necessity of taking not only the Philippines, but Cuba and Porto Rico, by the ruthless hand of military conquest, or, by some concessions that comported with the magnanimity and greatness and character of this country, gain them by the voluntary cession of a treaty of peace.

It was at such a time the offer was made as a final settlement of all the questions in dispute.

The payment of $20,000,000 to Spain provided for in the treaty was not, therefore, purchase money for the Philippine Islands. A careful examination of the negotiation on the several articles of the treaty shows conclusively that the $20,000,000 was finally agreed on to cover all the points of difference between the American and Spanish commissioners on all the articles of the treaty, none of which was finally concluded until the adoption of the last article.

The most strenuous contention of the Spanish commissioners from first to last was the liability of the United States for the payment of the debts of Cuba and Porto Rico. The withdrawal of Spanish sovereignty over Cuba, the cession of Porto Rico and the Spanish islands in the West Indies, and the cession of the island of Guam in the Ladrone, and the withdrawal of Spanish sovereignty from the Philippines, all these questions were left undetermined until the final agreement on the payment of the $20,000,000.

I call the attention of the House especially to the facts in the negotiations on the several articles of the treaty, which I will present from the official record of the negotiation published in Senate Document No. 62, part 1, of the third session of the Fifty-fifth Congress [the italics in all the extracts are my own]:

The protocol signed August 12, 1898, was the basis of the treaty of peace. Article III of the protocol was the only one over which there was any considerable discussion as to its specific meaning. Its wording is—

The United States will occupy and hold the city, bay, and harbor of Manila pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace; which shall determine the control, disposition, and government of the Philippines.

October 1, 1898. The peace commissioners met at Paris. The subject of the first conference was the status quo in the Philippines. This question was passed over with the right to bring up the subject hereafter. Without consuming time in remarks of my own, I will ask consent to extend them after the House has heard read certain extracts from the discussions on the propositions that were finally agreed upon between the American and Spanish commissioners, which will be more interesting to the House and give members more information, which I am anxious they should have, than any remarks that I can make.

From October 7 to October 26 the commission was engaged in discussions on the debt of Cuba, amounting to about $500,000,000, and the cession by Spain of her sovereignty over the island; and the cession of Porto Rico and the Spanish islands in the West Indies, which ended temporarily with the following language:

The American commissioners deem it unnecessary, after what has been stated, to enter into an examination of the general references, made in the Spanish memorandum, to cases in which debts contracted by a state have, upon its absorption, been assumed by the absorbing state, or to cases in which, upon the partition of territory, debts contracted by the whole have been by special arrangement apportioned. They are conceived to be inapplicable, legally and morally, to the so-called "Cuban debt," the burden of which, imposed upon the people of Cuba without their consent and by force of arms, was one of the principal wrongs for the termination of which the struggles for Cuban independence were undertaken. (Executive Document No. 62, part 1, page 50.)

At the conference October 14, 1898, the following suggestion was made by the Spanish commissioners and agreed to by the American commission:

The Spanish commissioners stated that before proceeding with the discussion of the questions under consideration they desired it to be understood that if certain articles should be agreed to, but in the end no treaty should be signed, the articles so agreed to should not in such case be taken as expressing either Government's estimation of its just rights in respect of the subjects to which the articles related. (Senate Executive Document, No. 62, part 1, page 45.)

October 14, 1898 (Senate Executive Document No. 62, part 1, page 59):

After much discussion, the president of the Spanish commission stated that the Spanish commissioners did not care for the phraseology in which the relinquishment of sovereignty was expressed, so long as it embraced an obligation as to debts, such as was stated in the second of the articles presented by them.

The president of the American commission, replying to this statement, inquired whether the president of the Spanish commission intended thereby to say that the Spanish commissioners would refuse to consider any articles as to Cuba and Porto Rico which contained no provision for the assumption of indebtedness by the United States or Cuba, or both.

October 26, 1898 (Senate Executive Document No. 62, part 1, pages 61 and 62):

The Spanish commissioners, although understanding that strict law decides the question of the Cuban debt in their favor, are in duty bound and are willing to moderate the said strictness in view of the advantages which Spain may derive from other stipulations of the treaty which, without being prejudicial to the United States, may be favorable to Spain.

Considering, therefore, that the article or articles to which the president of the American commission refers can not at this time be the subject of final approval, since they must remain subject to the others to be included in the same treaty, meeting the approval of both high parties:

"The Spanish commissioners answer the said question by stating that, reiterating their conviction that pursuant to law the colonial obligations of Cuba and Porto Rico must follow these islands and their sovereignty, they do not refuse to consider any articles as to Cuba and Porto Rico which contain no provision for the assumption of indebtedness by the United States, or Cuba, or both, subordinating the final approval of such articles to that of the others which are to form the complete treaty, and they therefore invite the American commissioners to enter upon the discussion of the other points to be embodied in the treaty and, at the outset, to take up the discussion of the Philippine Archipelago, and to propose to the Spanish commissioners what they understand should be agreed upon in said treaty with respect to this subject."

The American commissioners, after the reading of this paper, inquired whether they were to understand that the Spanish commissioners accepted the articles previously presented by them as to Cuba, Porto Rico, and Guam.

The Spanish commissioners replied that they accepted them in the sense stated in the paper—provisionally, subject to the conclusion of a treaty of peace.

October 31, 1898 (Senate Executive Document No. 62, part 1, pages 108, 109):

The American commissioners, having been invited by the Spanish commissioners at the last conference to present a proposition in regard to the Philippine Islands, beg to submit the following article on that subject:

"Spain hereby cedes to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands and lying within the following line: A line running along the parallel of latitude 21° 30' north from the one hundred and eighteenth to the one hundred and twenty-seventh degree meridian of longitude east of Greenwich, thence along the one hundred and twenty-seventh degree meridian of longitude east of Greenwich to the parallel of 4° 45' north latitude, thence along the parallel of 4° 45' north latitude to its intersection with the meridian of longitude 119° 35' east of Greenwich, thence along the meridian of longitude 119° 35' east of Greenwich to the parallel of latitude 7° 40' north, thence along the parallel of latitude of 7° 40' north to its intersection with the 116th degree meridian of longitude east of Greenwich, thence by a direct line to the intersection of the tenth degree parallel of north latitude with the one hundred and eighteenth degree meridian of longitude east of Greenwich, and thence along the one hundred and eighteenth degree meridian of longitude east of Greenwich to the parallel of latitude 21° 30' north."

A proper reference to the cession thus proposed may be inserted in the article of the treaty relating to public property, archives, and records in territory which Spain cedes or over which she relinquishes her sovereignty.

The American commissioners beg further to state that they are prepared to insert in the treaty a stipulation for the assumption by the United States of any existing indebtedness of Spain incurred for public works and improvements of a pacific character in the Philippines.

November 4, 1898. Proposition of the American Commission to assume the indebtedness of the Philippine Islands was rejected by the Spanish commission.

November 23, 1898 (Senate Executive Document No. 62, part 1, pages 210, 211). The following is the reply of the American commissioners on the rejection of their proposition:

The situation that has arisen in the Philippines was neither foreseen nor desired by the United States, but, since it exists, that Government does not shirk the responsibilities growing out of it; and the American commissioners now make to the Spanish commissioners, in the light of those responsibilities, a final proposition.

The proposal presented by the American commissioners in behalf of their Government for the cession of the Philippines to the United States having been rejected by the Spanish commissioners, and the counter proposal of the latter for the withdrawal of the American forces from the islands and the payment of an indemnity by the United States to Spain having been rejected by the American commissioners, the American commissioners, deeming it essential that the present negotiations, which have already been greatly protracted, should be brought to an early and definite conclusion, beg now to present a new proposition embodying the concessions which for the sake of immediate peace their Government is under the circumstances willing to tender.

The Government of the United States is unable to modify the proposal heretofore made for the cession of the entire archipelago of the Philippines, but the American commissioners are authorized to offer to Spain, in case the cession should be agreed to, the sum of $20,000,000, to be paid in accordance with the terms to be fixed in the treaty of peace.

And it being the policy of the United States to maintain in the Philippines an open door to the world's commerce, the American commissioners are prepared to insert in the treaty now in contemplation a stipulation to the effect that, for a term of years, Spanish ships and merchandise shall be admitted into the ports of the Philippine Islands on the same terms as American ships and merchandise.

The American commissioners are also authorized and prepared to insert in the treaty, in connection with the cessions of territory by Spain to the United States, a provision for the mutual relinquishment of all claims for indemnity, national and individual, of every kind, of the United States against Spain and of Spain against the United States that may have arisen since the beginning of the late insurrection in Cuba and prior to the conclusion of a treaty of peace.

The American commissioners may be permitted to express the hope that they may receive from the Spanish commissioners, on or before Monday the 28th of the present month, a definite and final acceptance of the proposals herein made as to the Philippine Islands, and also of the demands as to Cuba, Porto Rico, and other Spanish islands in the West Indies, and Guam, in the form in which those demands have been provisionally agreed to.

November 28, 1898, the Spanish commissioners reply to the ultimatum of the American commissioners in the following language (Senate Executive Document No. 62, part 1, page 213):

Spain having on her part exhausted all diplomatic recourses in the defense of what she considers her rights and even for an equitable compromise, the Spanish commissioners are now asked to accept the American proposition in its entirety and without further discussion, or to reject it, in which latter case, as the American commission understands, the peace negotiations will end, and the protocol of Washington will consequently be broken.

The Government of Her Majesty, moved by lofty reasons of patriotism and humanity, will not assume the responsibility of again bringing upon Spain all the horrors of war. In order to avoid them it resigns itself to the painful strait of submitting to the law of the victor, however harsh it may be, and as Spain lacks the material means to defend the rights she believes are hers, having recorded them, she accepts the only terms the United States offers her for the concluding of the treaty of peace.

The stipulation in the treaty as finally adopted relative to the inhabitants of the islands acquired is in the following language, Article IX of the treaty:

The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, it will be seen by these extracts from the official records of the discussions on propositions to be incorporated as articles in the treaty of peace that all of them were left in abeyance until the treaty should be finally agreed on; and the final conclusion of the treaty was the proposition on the part of the American commissioners to pay Spain $20,000,000, which should cover all the controversy from beginning to end about the cession of territory or the debts of Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands.

Then the different articles that have been passed over were agreed to, and the last one was that "The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territories hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by the Congress." What their civil and political condition shall be is to be determined by the Congress of the United States. The territory is already annexed.

We hear a great deal about forcible annexation of the Philippines. They are a part of American territory to-day, whether Spain ratifies the treaty or not. Supposing she does not, which she is quite likely not to do, in accordance with her whole history in reference to recognizing the independence of the South American Republics, she can refuse, and say to the world, "The United States in its great power robbed Spain of all her colonies, and we have no power nor means to prevent it." The territory that the United States has already taken would still be American territory, and the only question would be whether we have to pay Spain the $20,000,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I yield a moment to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], who desires to make a request of the House.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the honorable gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and myself be allowed an hour and twenty minutes—

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I will make my own request.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That I be allowed an hour to speak on the financial, banking, and currency question, giving a résumé of what has been done. I think it is important to the public business and to that question that I may have some time, at the discretion of the Speaker, either this afternoon or during the session to-morrow before 2 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the gentleman will prefer that request now.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I prefer the request now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may be accorded an hour—

Mr. BAILEY. To proceed at once?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. To proceed at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may be accorded an hour in which to discuss the financial question.

Mr. CANNON. At what time?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to pass my bill. I have no objection to his talking as soon as I get my bill through.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman shall pass his bill.

Mr. CANNON. I want to get it passed now, as it has to go to the Senate, and there is scant time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STEELE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that objection of the gentleman from Indiana comes too late.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. There was no objection. I yield for the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I was rising to object at the time the motion was put.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not too late. The gentleman from Illinois was undoubtedly reserving an objection.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I desire to say I am quite content if the House has time. So far as I am concerned, with the business I am charged with from my committee, I have nothing to call to the attention of the House except to pass this bill. It is important that it should go to the Senate. [Cries of "Vote!"] I ask for a vote on the bill.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5578) for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAY. On that I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). The bill has not been read yet.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether or not the gentleman from Iowa is asking to pass this bill under suspension of the rules. Is that the proposition pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has made that motion.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I be permitted to make another inquiry? That is, when a bill is attempted to be passed under a suspension of the rules, that it is not subject to amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not subject to amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAY. I demand a second.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. HAY. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Virginia will take their place as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 2.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, the noes have not been called for. If so, it certainly was not heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair called for the noes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We did not hear the call for the noes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote has been announced. If it is a mistake, without there is objection, the Chair will again call for the negative, as some gentlemen say they did not hear. Those opposed will now pass between the tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported 19 in the negative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 83, the nays are 19; so the motion is seconded.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has twenty minutes and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has twenty minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I be relieved from service on the conference committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] be appointed in my stead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will be relieved from service on the conference committee on the sundry civil bill, and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] will be substituted in his stead. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 216. Joint resolution construing the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents;" and

S. R. 200. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to lend 10,000 cots, 2,000 tents, and 10,000 mattresses to the executive committee of the United Confederate Veterans' Reunion to be held at Charleston, S. C., May 10, 1899.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 631) to confirm title to lots 13 and 14 in square 959, in Washington, D. C.

ARMY REORGANIZATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that I can safely say to the House that the Committee on Military Affairs, in submitting this bill to the House for its action, was constrained to that course on account of the situation we are now in. I think I can say, further than that, that if it were an open question and we were free to act as our judgment might dictate, there would not be a member of the committee who would have been in favor of reporting this bill favorably as it stands.

But, Mr. Speaker, this Congress dies on the 4th day of March—next Saturday afternoon; and the committee did not feel justified, on its own motion and its own account, in taking such action as seemed to make sure an extra session of Congress, and we believed the defeat of this bill would do that. I shall not take the time of the House in discussing the situation we are in—and by that I do not mean legislatively, but the country generally—and the necessity for an increase in the Army that is conceded; but I do want to call the attention of this House somewhat to this bill. I feel that the House is entitled to know what the bill provides.

Mr. TAWNEY. Before the gentleman does that, will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it your judgment that if the House should refuse to suspend the rules and pass this bill, and we should take up the bill and then adopt as a substitute the bill which the House has heretofore passed and put it in conference, it would be impossible to secure a better bill than the Senate has sent back to us?

Mr. HULL. I do not know that I am called upon to answer that question; every member in the House can judge of it just as well as I can. The danger of failure is great.

Mr. TAWNEY. I thought the gentleman was better acquainted with the situation in the Senate than other members.

Mr. HULL. I can only say that when this bill was before the Senate for consideration there was absolutely no opportunity given the members of that body to pass upon questions. It was simply a statement there on the floor and in the lobbies that you have got to take what we offer or you will get nothing; and so I think every member of this House can answer the question as well as I can. I do not believe, if the Senate of the United States, composed as it is to-day, were to vote on such a bill as this, with the understanding that they could have the time to perfect it, time to debate it, time to vote upon it and to amend it, that one-third of the Senators would vote for it.

The bill as originally reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, so far as the line of the Army was concerned, was a good one. It followed the line of the House bill in the organization of the cavalry and the infantry absolutely; it followed the line of the House bill on artillery, except it made regimental organization in place of a corps, and that is simply a difference in name. It made no difference in the batteries. They added two batteries to each regiment of artillery.

The House bill provided, so far as the companies were concerned, a maximum and a minimum, and it gave the President discretion between the two extremes; but the Senate bill fixed a minimum only. On the floor of the Senate they struck out the minimum, the words "not less than," and fixed the maximum of the companies in the infantry, artillery, and cavalry. In this bill they fix the number of regiments in the Army, and they fix the number of companies in the regiment, and they have fixed the total number of men that can be put in a company. In other words, they have made the infantry 25 regiments, cavalry 10 regiments, artillery 7 regiments, and added 2 batteries to each regiment. They fix the number of privates in a company as a total, making in the cavalry 43 privates, heavy artillery 53 privates, light artillery 51 privates, and in the infantry 48 privates for a company maximum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a very serious question arises in my mind on section 12.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion? The total number of privates authorized is 22,956.

Mr. HULL. That is privates only.

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Sixty-five thousand is a maximum, and then there is a maximum number for a company, and the number of companies in the regiment, and the number of regiments, and you multiply the number in a company by the number of companies, and that by the number of companies in a regiment, and that by the number of regiments, and it gives you 22,000 men.

Mr. HULL. It gives more than that.

Mr. BROMWELL. You fix the number at 22,000 and then further along you say it shall not exceed 65,000.

Mr. HULL. Section 12 provides that "to meet the present exigencies of the military service the President is hereby authorized to maintain the Regular Army at a strength of not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, to be distributed among the several branches of the service, including the Signal Corps," etc.

Now, when the bill was reported this section stood as it does now; but, as I said a minute ago, the number in a company was only fixed as a minimum. The Senate struck out the minimum and made the maximum, so that now we have prescribed the number of regiments, the number of companies, and the number of enlisted men, and these two clauses contradict each other in their terms.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I assume the gentleman has concluded his statement on that point. I think he is right, and I think it is utterly impossible to reconcile these two provisions, and of course the Executive Department must choose between them in executing this law. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that the Senate has also raised the age limit from 40 years to 50 years within which certain officers may be appointed and leaves it almost without limitation?

Mr. HULL. All except the second lieutenants. If gentlemen will look on page 7 they will find that they have placed an age of 44 for different staff places for those appointed from civil life.

Mr. BAILEY. The more important question is on page 12, in the last proviso, which reads:

And provided further, That the President is authorized to enlist temporarily in service for absolute necessary purposes in the Philippine Islands volunteers, officers, and men individually or by organization.

Now, am I to understand that if there be a company of volunteers in the Philippine Islands consisting of 90 men, 50 of whom desire to remain in the service while 40 demand to be mustered out as provided in the law under which they were enlisted, the President can reenlist the whole organization against the will of the 40 men who desire to come home?

Mr. HULL. I do not believe any such construction as that would be adopted by the President. I would prefer to go on with my statement, for fear I shall not get through in time.

Mr. BAILEY. It seems to me that unless the President is going to undertake to enlist in that way, which is practically conscription, this provision is a useless one.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Texas can construe language just as well as I can when it does not require any technical knowledge, and, I think, better than I can where the question is simply one of law—much better. So that I do not want to take time in discussing that question of construction at this time.

Mr. TALBERT rose.

Mr. HULL. I can not yield to the gentleman now. I have only twenty minutes, and I want to get through. If I had time I should be glad to answer all questions. But there is time on the other side, and no doubt the gentleman can obtain a portion of it. If I had more time I should gladly yield to my friend from South Carolina.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to get some information—

Mr. HULL. I can not yield to the gentleman now. I do think I ought to be allowed to go on and make my statement on this bill.

Mr. GAINES. So do I. I simply wanted the gentleman's consent to ask him a question, after a while, for information.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in regard to the question which has been raised here as to the power of expansion, I will say very frankly that while a great many good lawyers insist there is no more power to expand the aggregate number of men than to increase the number of companies or regiments, the Attorney-General of the United States takes a contrary view. He expressed no doubt on the subject. He says that the construction of this bill, if enacted, would be that the President might expand up to the number of 65,000. The same question has been submitted to the Department of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, and an opinion given equally positive that the President will have no more power to increase the number of men in a company than to increase the number of companies, or the number of regiments.

Now you have the two opinions on that subject. If I did not regard the right to expand given, I would not vote for the bill. But, Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that the bill certainly does. Admitting that the President can expand until July 1, 1901, it makes the war strength of this Army, with all its officers and machinery, after July 1, 1901—the total strength to which it can be expanded without further legislation—35,140 enlisted men and noncommissioned officers. It advertises to the world the fact that this nation is willing to have an army in which, on its war strength, a cavalry company may have as privates less than double the number of officers and noncommissioned officers in command. The force will certainly be magnificently officered.

In the way of economy, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides, in excess of the number provided for in the House bill, a total number of officers in the regimental organizations alone, without counting anything beyond the regiment, of 949—colonels, lieutenant-colonels, majors, captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants.

Mr. BROMWELL. Is there any increase in the Engineer Corps?

Mr. HULL. No, sir.

Mr. BROMWELL. The very place where an increase is most needed.

Mr. HULL. Nor in the Ordnance Department, either. The increase of which I have just spoken is accounted for by the fact that 35,000 men are enlisted for two years and four months and organized into 30 additional regiments, making a net increase over the House bill of 17 regiments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman antagonize the passage of the bill?

Mr. HULL. I am explaining it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is the gentleman antagonizing the bill?

Mr. HULL. I am explaining it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is the gentleman in favor of the passage of the bill or against it?

Mr. HULL. I do not think the gentleman from Indiana has any right to catechize me as to what I am doing. I will state my position in my own way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield for any interruption.

Mr. HULL. I propose to take my own course.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Somehow or other the gentleman does not seem to be able to answer questions.

Mr. HULL. Now, I believe that under the construction of the Attorney-General this bill will give the President of the United States an ample force to carry on all necessary operations and protect all the rights of the Government for the next two years. I believe that under the construction of the Judge-Advocate-General he would not be able to do so, but I believe the construction of the President and his execution of the law will be on the line of the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, and therefore provide 100,000 men, enlisted men, to serve until July 1, 1901.

There is another provision, too, to which I wish to call the attention of the House. It is found on page 13 of the bill, in section 15, which provides:

That each and every provision of this act shall continue in force until July 1, 1901; and on and after that date all the general, staff, and line officers appointed to the Army under this act shall be discharged—

This, it will be observed, is a change in the present law. That provides that we should return to the numbers in force in April last. This allows all of the officers appointed—and I do not object to the provision myself—under the present law to remain in the service, although I think we get more officers than are necessary for the number of men allowed.

Mr. MARSH. Will you allow me just an instant?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. Would we get more officers than we would need if we get an army of 100,000 men?

Mr. HULL. We do not get any such army under this bill. I say that we are simply getting more officers than we need for the number of men allowed.

This act goes on to provide—and the enlisted force of the line of the Army shall be reduced to the number as provided for by a law prior to April 1, 1898, exclusive of such additions as have been, or may be, made under this act to the artillery, and except the cadets provided for by this act, who may be appointed prior to July 1, 1901.

Now, sir, that simply provides for the reduction of the Army absolutely on the 1st day of July, 1901. But it does give, in my judgment, as I have already said, an ample force up to that time, and that is reason enough to cause me to support the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. What will be the size of the Army after that?

Mr. HULL. It will be, after adding the 14 batteries of artillery, about 29,000 men, in round numbers. The proviso declares that it shall not affect the additions made in the artillery force.

Mr. BROMWELL. Will you allow me just here—

Mr. HULL. Before answering any other question, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two further in explanation.

I wish to say that this is, in my judgment, the best the House can do at present. The bill does not meet my approval, for reasons which I have stated; but I do not see what else can be done. I do not intend to say, or mean to say, that I am in favor of the provisions of the bill; but I am in favor of giving the Executive of the nation ample power to protect all the interests of the Government here or elsewhere for the next two years. [Applause.] This bill, bad as it is, will do that.

Mr. BROMWELL. Now, if my friend will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the provision commencing with line 17, on page 13, which makes this great Army bill a vehicle for the exercise of certain favoritism for two officers, one of whom graduated in 1873 and the other in 1876—neither of whom has had a day's experience in the Engineer Corps, neither of whom has been examined for promotion in the grades of that corps—is proper. Is it fair that this bill shall be the vehicle of their promotion to the office and rank of major, and to that extent of reducing the grade of every other officer who has been serving in that branch of the Army below that? I find that provision in the bill looks very much like it.

Mr. HULL. I can only say, in response to my friend from Ohio, that the Chief of Engineers sent a letter to the committee yesterday afternoon—

A MEMBER. Read the letter.

Mr. HULL. The letter is not in my hand at present; but this letter protested against this provision on the ground alleged by the gentleman from Ohio, but spoke in most complimentary terms of the two officers.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Ohio to allow the opponents of the bill to have all the time?

Mr. HULL. I am only explaining the bill and stating the reasons why I have made the motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. PAYNE. But the gentleman from Ohio is opposing the bill.

Mr. HULL. This provision, to which reference is made, was put in by the Senate; but I am told that they are men who graduated ahead of their class, and want to get into the engineer service. They are said to be accomplished officers.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me a question?

Mr. HULL. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HEPBURN. What will be the situation, in the judgment of my friend from Iowa, if this bill is not passed? I mean what will be the condition of the Army?

Mr. HULL. The condition of the Army on the termination of the war would be to reduce the effective strength to 26,610 men; and in my judgment the volunteers should go out, so that without legislation we would have no army worthy the name.

Mr. MAHON. That is right.

Mr. HULL (continuing). When peace is concluded, I think the volunteers should go out; and one of the controlling reasons for my consenting to bring this bill before the House at all, apart from the fact that only a few more days remain of this session, is my belief that every volunteer should be mustered out and sent home as soon as possible, and if we refuse legislation in reference to the Army they may be kept in for an indefinite time, in my judgment. And so far as I am concerned, no vote or act of mine shall go to keep the volunteers in service beyond the proclamation of peace if it is possible in any way to avoid it.

Mr. CARMACK. Could they be kept in after that?

Mr. HULL. The law says "until the objects for which they were called into the service are accomplished." The Regular Army provision was more stringent and direct than that as to the volunteers. This is supposed to take away all doubt as to that fact, to let those boys in Manila and Cuba who are volunteers and who do not desire to remain in the Army come home.

Mr. CARMACK. Has not the Attorney-General given his construction of the law, and said that upon the ratification of the treaty their term expires and they have a right to come home?

Mr. HULL. He has not construed the law in that way, so far as I know. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has twenty minutes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill and I shall vote against it, because, in the first place, it provides for more soldiers than the Government has asked for or has need for. It provides for 100,000 enlisted men and for at least 5,000 officers. I shall vote against it because it is a measure which increases the expenditures of the Government when there is no necessity for it.

I was in favor and am now in favor of giving to the Government every man that it needs for the purposes of preserving law and order in Cuba and in the Philippine Islands, but I do not believe in giving more by 20,000 men than are necessary for that purpose. And this is what this bill does. Nor do I believe in sacrificing principle for the sake of expediency.

I am opposed to the bill for the further reason that it has in it a conscript feature; and if I was not opposed to it before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] made his speech, I ought to be opposed to it now, because, while he ostensibly favored the bill, his speech was practically against the bill. He rightly said that under the provisions of this act two law departments of this Government can not agree whether the President will have the power to use the 65,000 men which this bill purports to give him or whether he can only use 35,000 men. In my judgment, he can only use the 35,000 men, and for that reason I might be constrained to vote for the measure.

Under the provisions of this bill the various companies, regiments, troops, and batteries are confined to a specific number of enlisted men, and the provision for 65,000 men is directly in opposition to that provision of the bill. We are told by the chairman of the committee that the Judge-Advocate-General takes one view of the matter and that the Attorney-General takes another view. Such legislation as this is not fit to go upon the statute books and ought not to go there.

I am opposed to it for the reason that, instead of permitting the volunteers now in the Philippine Islands to return, as the chairman of the committee says they ought to do, and I cordially agree with him, under the provision of this bill to be found on page 12, these men, in my judgment, can be kept there if a majority of any organization, regiment, or company chooses so to vote. The President is given the power to keep the volunteers there and prevent them from coming home.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. HAY. I can not yield to the gentleman. I have promised all my time to gentlemen on this side.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the redeeming feature of this bill is the fact that the Senate has placed a limitation upon it by which the standing Army will be reduced on the 1st day of May, 1901, to 27,000 men, or about that number.

Mr. HULL. Twenty-nine thousand.

Mr. HAY. Twenty-nine thousand men. That is the only redeeming feature that I see in this bill. But I do not believe that it will be wise or patriotic for members of this House to vote for this bill in its present shape. I certainly can not vote for a bill of this importance and of this magnitude without having an opportunity to offer any amendment or time in which to consider its provisions.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12008) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2552) to set aside a portion of certain lands in the State of Washington, now known as the Pacific Forest Reserve, as a public park, to be known as the Washington National Park.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my first utterance in this discussion to-day shall be in commendation of the American soldiers and sailors who are now fighting in the Philippine Islands. We should cheerfully applaud their courage and loyalty in flying to the rescue of our country's flag when it is involved, and no word of criticism should come from this side of the Chamber or the other side. No member glories more in the triumph of the American arms than I, nor delights more in the patriotic achievements of our soldiers in their response to duty.

But, Mr. Speaker, I shall oppose this Senate bill if it is the last act of mine in the Fifty-fifth Congress. When we declared war against Spain, we did it for a definite purpose. We should not lose sight of the moving cause. We said:

The abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating as they have in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, can not longer be endured.

For these reasons and these alone we declared in the solemn declaration of Congress:

The people of the island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent.

We placed the war upon such lofty grounds of humanity. Shall we charge an indemnity for our love of humanity and liberty and say it must be paid in money or with the Philippine Islands?

No lust of empire or greed for conquest was then lurking in our high and noble purposes. It was a love of freedom and independence that led us into this holy warfare to liberate a struggling and oppressed people. Will some other humane nation be called upon to raise its voice and arms by intervening to liberate the struggling Filipinos? I deliberately submit the query to the future for an answer. I still believe this great American nation will yet say to the civilized world we will not attempt to govern the Filipinos against their consent; we will not take their country with or without their expressed will. For my part, I propose to live up to the declaration of intervention both by my acts and by my votes on the floor of this House.

To continue this war against the inhabitants of the Philippines is the rankest repudiation of the grounds upon which the Revolutionary war was fought. It is nothing short of a land-grabbing foray urged on by the trader and commercial cormorant in politics. It is the soul of greed feasting upon the fruits arising from a humane and honorable war. For seventy-five years we have contended with Mr. Monroe that "European powers will not be permitted to extend their system to this hemisphere." Let us not abandon that doctrine by thus repudiating it.

Why are we asked to increase the Army? Why are we asked for a hundred thousand soldiers for the next three years? Do we need them in Cuba, where there is no possibility of war and where it has been announced the soldiers will not longer remain after the ratification of the treaty by Spain? Do we need them in Porto Rico, where all is quiet? Any man who can reason at all can understand that the soldiers are desired now to carry on the war against the inhabitants of the Philippines, that they are wanted to strengthen and develop the military arm of the Government for the future.

But you ask, would I leave the President of the United States without a sufficient military force in the Philippine Islands? I do not hesitate to state my position upon that question. If I were in the position of the President of the United States I would instantly flash a friendly message to the inhabitants of those islands, and tell them we are not their enemies. I would proclaim to them in that message that they are entitled to govern themselves, that they may form their own government, "that they are and of right ought to be free and independent." I would give them back their country. Then not another gun would be fired, not another battle would occur, not another brave American soldier or sailor would be hurled into eternity in this horrible contest.

We should not hesitate to inform them that we are not seeking to oppress them, but are only desirous of securing to them their long-cherished dream of liberty, as every paper in the United States announced we would do the morning after the news of the glorious victory won by Dewey and the immortal patriots who were with him at Manila. They said, away over there in the East a great and glorious republic, fashioned after our own American Republic, will be erected to scatter the blessings of freedom and to enlighten that far-distant country with the principles of self-government. Alas! what false prophets. But the dream is vanished. Instead, we must have an army annually costing over $100,000,000, and a navy costing over $150,000,000 each year. Against this enormous burden and taxation I protest and raise my voice. Under it the people will groan for years to come.

In the good old days of the Republic, when democratic simplicity blessed us, the governing arm reached up from the people to the central Government. We had State sovereignty and State's rights. Now the ruling and superior arm reaches down from the central Government to the people. We must be ruled from the national capital and not from the hearts of the people. The military must now be superior to the civil arm of the Government. State lines must fade out and disappear. Imperialism must supplant democratic principles. The struggle between the empire and the old Republic has begun. I denounce and repel this imperial spirit. Let this military fever and the immense armies and great navies pass from among freemen inhabiting a democratic Republic.

Why were the twenty millions of dollars given to Spain? Was it done in order that we might give the inhabitants of the Philippines their liberty and independence? If that had been the purpose our commissioners would have said to the Spanish commissioners, recognize the independence of the Filipinos, withdraw your army and navy from their country, let them have a government of their own, and we will not pay you one dollar for those islands. And Spain, bleeding and mangled at our feet, would not have resisted for an instant, but would have been compelled to comply literally with those demands. But that was not the purpose of the Administration. It has, in my judgment, been the fixed purpose and determination of the Administration from our first occupancy of the Philippines to take them and annex them to our territory permanently.

It is the beginning of a colonial policy for America. It means greater expenses and more enormous taxation for this country. The policy shall not receive my indorsement by a vote for this bill or in any other way by my voice in Congress. I shall not stand here to-day and agree that this bill shall pass without my protest, when it fixes an army of over 100,000 men upon our people for nearly three years. This is a momentous day in American history, and the most radical departure taken since the foundation of the Republic; and to perpetually record my protest against it, when the proper time comes, if I am alive, I shall demand the yeas and nays, and cast my vote against this odious measure.

It is true that it is claimed the Army of a 100,000 is only for a few years. But a simple message of friendship to the Filipinos will terminate the war, and there will be no need for further battles anywhere; therefore, no necessity for an army.

In the name of the solemn declaration of intervention, in the name of the spirit which animated our noble ancestry who enshrined freedom and independence in our Republic, in the name of the sacred cause of humanity, let our Government speed that message around the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, there are several reasons which impel me to vote against the pending measure. Prominent among those, not undertaking to mention them all, is the fact that I do not think we need as large a standing army as this bill provides for during the next two or three years. I am not going to discuss here the great question which has been under consideration during the past two or three months, as to whether it is right or wrong for the President to commit this country to the policy of expansion, to which he himself seems to be committed.

I may say here, however, in the discussion of this question of expansion, or imperialism, if you will allow the expression, we have been prone to overlook a very important feature of that policy, or, at least, some of the details of that policy. We have heretofore confined our discussions to the Orient, to the islands in Asiatic waters, to the exclusion of matters nearer home. In all of the wide range which the discussion of this important question has taken, we have not considered the great wrong that is being done to the Cuban people by ourselves.

On the 18th of April of last year, the Congress of the United States, at the request of the President, adopted a resolution declaring war against Spain, mainly, as was claimed at the time, for the benefit of the Cuban patriots.

For more than three years the people of Cuba had been at war with the home government in an effort to gain their freedom from Spanish domination, and to establish an independent government of the Cubans and for the Cubans.

In this war they had fought with a bravery and a heroism born of desperation and of the very highest patriotism. They had suffered untold miseries and had faced death in every form. They had seen their beautiful island laid waste by the sword and the torch and its population desolated by famine and pestilence. A system of cruelty not heard of in the annals of civilized warfare had been practiced by the Spaniards upon them as a war measure, and hundreds and thousands of women and children had been deliberately starved to death. Indeed, their sufferings and fortitude were so great and their bravery and heroism so marked as to challenge the admiration and sympathy, not only of this country, but of the liberty-loving in all lands and all climes.

In this free land their appeals were heard by our people, and a generous response went up from the great American heart; but the Cuban patriots asked little at our hands. They did not ask that we as a nation should take up arms in their behalf. They only requested the simple boon of a recognition of them as belligerents. Give them this, they said, and they would soon gain their independence and establish a free government of their own.

And this, Mr. Speaker, would have been our wisest policy. If this course had been pursued by this Government at any time during the three years anterior to the blowing up of the Maine in Havana's harbor and the destruction of the lives of our gallant seamen there, the freedom of the Cubans would have been attained, in my judgment, without a declaration of war on our part, without armed intervention, and war would have been averted, with all that it has entailed upon us.

A simple message from the President at any time to Congress would have brought about this result. Such action on the part of this great Government of ours would have given the Cubans a status in civilized warfare, and would have opened wide the door through which aid would have come to them from liberty's votaries in this and all other countries in the civilized world.

But the President—and I refer not alone to the present occupant of the White House, but to his predecessor as well—turned a deaf ear to the entreaties of the Cuban patriots until finally forced to hear and to act by the overwhelming sentiment of the American people. Still this action, when it came, was not what the American people wanted or the Cubans desired. For on the 11th of April the President sent a message to Congress asking that he be authorized to use the Army and Navy of the United States to drive Spain out of Cuba, which was nothing less than a request for a declaration of war.

But in that resolution we planted ourselves on high ground. Borrowing the language of our own Declaration of Independence, descriptive of our condition and of our relations to Great Britain when the war for our independence began, as also descriptive of the condition of the Cuban people, and of their relations to Spain, we declared that they were and of a right ought to be free and independent, and in accordance with the request of the President directed him to use the Army and Navy of the United States in making that declaration good.

But, Mr. Speaker, we did not stop there. Recognizing the fact that the Cubans, as we were going to their island unbidden, might misinterpret our intentions, and that foreign countries, in whose counsel chambers the voice of liberty and the cry of distress are never heard, might doubt our sincerity and impugn our motives, we disclaimed any intention or disposition to exercise any control over the island of Cuba except for the pacification of the same—that is, for the purpose of driving the Spaniard away—and announced our intention when that was accomplished to leave the government of the island to its people.

Now, a part of this resolution has been carried out. Within less than one hundred and twenty days from that time, by a series of the most brilliant victories both by sea and land, the Spanish power in Cuban waters was crushed into atoms and the Spanish Queen ceased to rule over the island.

But what have we done to carry out the rest, and, in the eyes of the world, the most important part of this resolution? Have we left them to form their government and to control their own domestic affairs? More than six months have passed away since the signing of the protocol, which practically ended the war between this country and Spain, yet no government of the Cubans or by the Cubans has been recognized by this Government, nor have they been permitted to form one. On the contrary, that island is governed to-day not by the Cubans, who more than ten months ago were declared to be free and independent, but they are governed solely by the military power of that nation which promised them and the civilized world that they might govern themselves.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, greater efforts are being put forth by the military power of the United States for the alleged purpose of governing the Cubans than was put forth by that same power to drive the Spaniards away. Twenty thousand men, aided by our Navy, were found more than sufficient for that purpose; and yet, now that the Spaniard is gone and the Spanish flag has ceased to wave over the island of Cuba, it requires 40,000 soldiers to govern and control the Cubans.

Now, I make bold to assert that a great wrong is being done the Cuban patriots by our Government, while a still greater wrong is being done ourselves and the cause of freedom and humanity by the course we are pursuing toward these people. We promised them bread, and gave them a stone; we promised them freedom from foreign domination, and are continuing that yoke of bondage with only a change of masters; we promised them a government of their own choosing, and are giving them a government of our own selection, and one, too, imposed at the point of the bayonet and at the mouth of the cannon.

We declared that they of a right ought to be free, and were free and independent, and that, too, when the tread of the Spanish soldier was heard in every city of the land, and when a thousand Spanish cannon were trained on the Cuban patriots; but now that the Spaniard has gone, we have taken his place, not perchance to pillage and plunder as he did, but to rule and govern without the consent of the governed, as the Spanish tyrant did.

I know it may be answered that we propose yet to give them freedom, that the present military occupation is only temporary, and that as soon as a stable form of government is established we will then depart. But when is that to be, and who is to be the judge of the time and stability of the government? Above all, under what auspices will this government be established? Will it be under those of the Cubans themselves, their generals, their statesmen and patriots, or will it be established under the shadow of military power? Ah, Mr. Speaker, I fear the latter, and so do the Cuban people, and with good reason, too.

They can not be unmindful of our pledges, of our declarations on the one hand and our acts on the other. They know that the President declared, even in his message recommending a declaration of a war with Spain, that forcible annexation would be criminal aggression. But they also know that in the face of that declaration the President has seized Hawaii and is now engaged in a war against the inhabitants of the far distant Philippines, in which our soldiers are mowing them down like grass, while the Filipinos are fighting for their lands and homes. They know, further, that Porto Rico has been taken as a result of the war, begun upon the high ground of humanity, and a desire to see the Cubans free.

It is, Mr. Speaker, in the light of all these events that they read and interpret the acts of our Government toward themselves. Why, they ask—and it is also a pertinent question for the American people to ask—have we sent forty-five or fifty thousand men to the island of Cuba while it only took 20,000 men to drive the Spaniard away, and when peace reigns from one end of the island to the other?

It can not be that they are carried there for the health of our soldiers, for Cuba has never been noted as a health resort for Americans or the Anglo-Saxon. It can not be that that people, who it was declared deserved to be free and independent ten months ago, can not now govern themselves and require the military power of this country to hold them in check, unless we intend to infringe upon their rights and to crush their hopes and aspirations for self-government.

Can it be, Mr. Speaker, that these people whose bravery and endurance in the cause of freedom challenged the admiration of the world, whose praises were sung by tongue and pen throughout the length and breadth of this land, and in whose behalf this great nation unsheathed the sword and made war both by sea and by land, now that the hand of the oppressor has been removed, are unworthy of the trust of their benefactors? I think not, and yet that is what our acts imply, unless it be that behind all our fair promises and our boasted unselfishness there lurks an ulterior design against the liberties of the Cuban patriots.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the Cubans have shown no disposition to give us trouble, and we have no just reason to mistrust them. True, we went to their island uninvited in the first place, if not against their wishes, to assist them in driving the Spaniards away. It is also true that we did not do to them as we would have had them do to us under similar circumstances. Our treatment of them has been marked with arrogance, if not with insolence. We have taken possession of their island, for which they fought and suffered so much. We control their custom-houses, and collect and disburse all their revenues without consulting them in the least.

Instead of turning the government over to the Cubans we keep many of the Spaniards in office to rule over them; and yet, with only now and then a murmur of disapproval, they submit to our rule, patiently awaiting the fulfillment of our promises.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is time when the American people themselves should know what is the meaning of our action toward the Cubans; what this army of 50,000 men quartered in Cuba portends; what the studied neglect of the Cuban provisional government and the evidently intended failure to recognize its existence implies.

I, of course, know what the people of the United States intend. They mean to carry out, if permitted to do so, our promises so solemnly made to the Cubans and the civilized world and to ourselves. They mean that the Cubans should have that for which they struggled, for which they endured hardships, for which they saw their island laid waste, their homes and firesides desolated, and for which they endured all the horrors of war inflicted by the sword, the torch, and by famine. That is what our people mean, but I am not so sure of the intention of the Administration, or of those who control the Administration.

I do not wish to be unjust, but we must look at things as they are, not as we might wish them to be. No matter with how much charity we may desire to view the acts of the Administration toward Cuba, the fact remains and can not be disguised that while we took up arms to free the Cubans and promised them freedom, our Government is the only power which stands to-day between them and absolute freedom. The military arm of this Government casts the only shadow which dims the star of the Cuban republic.

It may be claimed that in all we have done and are doing, as well as in all we have left undone, we are preparing the Cubans for self-government, educating them, as it were, in the way they should go. Premitting the fact that perhaps the Cubans are even now better able to work out their own political destiny than we are to perform that act for them, it is not altogether certain that the kind of education we are giving them will impress them with the blessing of freedom or increase their respect for our institutions.

Military edicts registered by the will of a foreign master and enforced by the bayonet, taxation without representation, offices doled out by the hand of a stranger, are conditions that are not calculated to increase the love of the Cubans for our institutions or inspire high ideals in their conception of self-government.

No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that we occasionally hear mutterings of discontent among the patient Cubans. I saw a few days ago, in a press dispatch, an extract taken from one of the most liberal and conservative Cuban papers, in which was copied the following from the pen of General Enrique Celiázo:

The Treasury Department expresses the intention of giving an honest administration, but it employs men who were used by the dishonest Spanish régime, and the department of justice is administered as under Spain. We hoped, but vainly, that the Americans would teach us new and better ways of government. It was logical to believe that they would break the old molds and build on methods prevailing in the United States. There laws based on the demands of the people prevail; but in the American administration in Cuba caprice rules with the sword, and the Cubans are thrown aside and also excommunicated.

The Cubans demanded with one voice the payment of their army, and the United States responded with insufficient charity and food. The United States come to instruct us as to governing; but they will not let us try to show what we can do. They come to give us independence, but seem to prepare for annexation. We may eventually vote upon the question of annexation, but with the reins of government in the hands of the Americans there is little hope of a fair expression of the people's wants. The centralization of power is established by the fact that General Brooke, or the Washington Government, makes the appointments. We are growing to be a nation of petty office-seekers; we have no political personality. The ways of the Americans are daily becoming more incomprehensible. We hoped to see the return of prosperity, but the country can not pay even the reduction made in taxes.

That is the language of one of Cuba's most trusted leaders, and, if true, furnishes a terrible arraignment of our Government. "They had hoped," he said, "that we would teach them new and better ways of government. It was logical," he says, "to believe that we would break the old molds and build on methods prevailing in the United States. Here laws based on the demands of the people prevail, but in Cuba, under our administration, caprice rules with the sword, while the Cubans are turned aside and excommunicated." What kind of lessons in self-government are we thus teaching them? What a preparation that for self-government!

But, sir, that is not the worst part of the General's complaint. The fear is expressed that we do not intend to give the Cubans freedom. Is it true that after all our fair promises we are only preparing for annexation? Is the President trying to do by indirection that which if done, he declares, by direct methods would be criminal aggression? If so, his purpose can be easily accomplished in the shadow of military power, and that would be one way of accounting for the large army in Cuba.

We know, because history tells us on many a gloomy page, how the will of the people has been thwarted, and how elections have been influenced, aye, controlled by the presence of armed soldiers.

If, then, this is the object of the Administration, we know how easily such a purpose can be carried out to a successful conclusion.

I will not, Mr. Speaker, say that that is the President's object, and we will yet trust him to see that faith is kept with the Cubans and that our name is untarnished; but if it is the intention of the Administration to take the step which the Cubans fear he is about to take, then he will have in the near future the American people to reckon with, for they will not tolerate such use of the American Army or pardon such violations of plighted faith.

Mr. Speaker, in the declaration of war upon the grounds given to the world as the motives which prompted our action we placed ourselves upon a plane high above that ever before taken by any nation whose history is recorded in the annals of the past; and by carrying out our pledges to these people we will add a luster to our name as Americans which will last throughout all the centuries of our future history, as it will shed its light over the years of our national life which have gone before; but if, on the contrary, we in an unguarded moment should pull down the lofty standard we have erected for ourselves; if, yielding to the desire of territorial aggrandizement and colonial acquisition, we should violate the terms of the bond between ourselves and the Cubans, we will cast a blot upon our name which all the centuries can not wipe out or efface.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the war now being waged against the Filipinos. It is a sad spectacle that a war begun in the name of liberty should degenerate into one of conquest. We found the Spaniards killing those people, and began with the pretense of liberating them; but having purchased Spain's alleged right to kill, we are waging relentless war to destroy their liberties or to kill them if they resist.

Now, to all this I am opposed. But even if we are to make war on them, we do not need the army for which this bill provides. Thirty or forty thousand men armed with the implements of modern warfare would be ample to kill all the Filipinos, with their crude weapons of bows and arrows. Let us, then, withdraw the army from Cuba, where it is not needed for any laudable purpose, and add to it temporarily such as may be necessary to cope with the Filipinos and the inclemencies of tropical summers until we can get away from those distant regions with honor, if possible, to ourselves and with credit to the civilization of the age. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. As a member of the committee, Mr. Speaker, in favor of this bill, I desire to be recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I want forty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, has the time expired for debate?

The SPEAKER. The time has not expired. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has some time left.

Mr. HAY. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this measure in its present shape, and, in addition to some other objections that have been urged against the bill by those gentlemen who have preceded me, all of which are very valid ones, I want to call the attention of the House to section 8 of this bill, which seems to me is provided especially to make a special place for a certain individual. When the law was enacted establishing the Record and Pension Bureau, it gave the President the right to appoint a chief of that Bureau with the rank of colonel. Colonel Ainsworth, of Vermont, was appointed to that position. This same person, it is now proposed in the Army bill, shall be promoted to a higher grade.

Now, this section provides that he shall be promoted to the position of brigadier-general, and it seems to me that this is a piece of private, special legislation, put in here especially to give this man the rank of brigadier-general, and to be retired at a certain age with full pay for life. Let us examine his office at present and note the surroundings and see how many clerks he has under his supervision, and then let us see what is the nature of his present position, whether it is civil or military. I believe there are, at the outside, only 600 clerks. My friend from Kansas on my left suggests that he has not as many as a half dozen, but I think there are 600, and they are civil employees, every one of them, put in under the certification of the rules of the civil service; a very small command for even a colonel, much less a brigadier-general.

It does seem to me that you can find no record where Colonel Ainsworth has ever been in the military service of the country in any way or ever had any military record. He is not a military man and, in my judgment, he is not now himself in the military service or subject to military orders. It seems to me that 600 men are too small a number to put a man over with the rank of brigadier-general; and then, in addition, he is to have an assistant with the rank of major or lieutenant-colonel, another place made for another particular individual already mentioned in the paper.

As I understand it, all the service he has ever seen is that he was appointed in 1874 to the position of assistant surgeon with the rank of first lieutenant, and I do not think he held that position long. I am not sufficiently informed, but I think, if I am correctly informed, soon after he resigned, for some cause or other. I do not know what. Possibly an examination of the records will disclose the facts.

Now, I submit that this section ought to be stricken out because we are not here to pass legislation to put in special pets and raise them to such a rank as that. The gentleman has possibly some special friend in the Senate. I do not know who it is, but he seems to have been influential in getting this thing in to raise this man to the rank of brigadier-general. You might as well make a brigadier-general of Mr. H. Clay Evans, Commissioner of Pensions, or Mr. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, or Mr. Binger Hermann, of the Land Office. If you are going to make a position for one, why do you not bring in all of your friends from this Department of the Government? I submit that this section ought to be stricken out. Or if you will not agree to do this, I ask again why have not these other gentlemen been made brigadier-generals?

Mr. STEELE. He is now an officer in the Army. It is because of the efficiency and promptness with which he dispatches business. His promotion may stimulate the heads of some other Department. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. Because their friends were not so prompt, says my friend from Indiana. Perhaps not; and with these objections and many others, I shall not support the measure, especially as it may give the President a right to conscript my people and drag them off to the Philippine Islands to die in the swamps. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has one minute remaining.

Mr. HAY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK].

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say, representing as I do a number of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, that I expect to vote for this bill, not because it is such a bill as I would have drawn or such a bill as I entirely approve of, but because I know if we could succeed in defeating this bill we should get a worse one. This is the best that can be obtained, and for that reason, if for no other, I expect and intend to vote for it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, on behalf of the friends of this bill, I would like to have twenty minutes, which I will divide up among those in favor of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have forty minutes against the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent that he be allowed twenty minutes in favor of the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I am afraid he will object to my request.

Mr. SULZER. No, I will not. Do you object to mine?

Mr. CANNON. I desire to submit a request to the House. I am not a member of the Military Committee, but I wish to ask unanimous consent that before the vote is taken on this question there may be twenty minutes more of debate on each side.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SULZER. I am willing to consent to that.

Mr. CANNON. This is an important measure, and I think this request should be granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks that twenty minutes more be allowed on each side for further debate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Does the gentleman from New York desire time?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MARSH. I want to say that I am in favor of this bill—

Mr. CANNON. If I am entitled to twenty minutes, I yield that time to my colleague [Mr. MARSH].

Mr. SULZER. Who is entitled to occupy the time in favor of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I yield that time to my colleague for his disposition.

Mr. STEELE. I submit that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] are recognized to control the time the debate will be all on one side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has made the request for unanimous consent, and is therefore, according to the usages of the House, entitled to one-half the time—twenty minutes—which he has yielded to his colleague [Mr. MARSH]. The Chair has no doubt that the gentleman from Illinois will allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], under the circumstances, to occupy some portion of his time.

Mr. SULZER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has yielded twenty minutes to his colleague, Colonel MARSH?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. CANNON. I desire that my colleague, who is on the Military Committee, shall control twenty minutes of the time.

Mr. SULZER. And who is to control the other twenty minutes?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] be permitted to control the other twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] opposed to the bill?

Mr. STEELE. I am, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will recognize him to control the remaining twenty minutes.

Mr. COX. Pardon me a moment. Do I understand that the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the committee, controls the twenty minutes in favor of the bill?

A MEMBER. Mr. Speaker, let us have order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to have order, and once in a while one member seems to desire it. [Laughter.] If that feeling could be extended, we would have order. Gentlemen will take their seats and suspend conversation.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. COX. Let me understand—

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill—

Mr. COX. I wish to inquire—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. MARSH. And I can not yield. I do not wish to be discourteous.

Mr. Speaker, the pending bill which has come over here from the Senate is not in all its points such a bill as I would draft or such a bill as I would be glad to support. But, Mr. Speaker, it does give this Administration temporarily the number of men and the number of officers that it may need for the next two years and four months. It provides that on the 1st day of July, 1901, the Regular Army shall consist of a little less than 30,000 men.

Mr. BARTLETT rose.

Mr. MARSH. I decline to be interrupted.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, provides that between now and 1901 the President may increase the Regular Army up to 65,000 enlisted men if in his judgment (and only in that contingency) it should be proper to do so. The bill does not require this to be done; it permits it to be done.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the bill confers upon the President of the United States the power to call into the service during that period—that is, between now and the 1st of July, 1901—35,000 volunteers, whose officers shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The bill does not make it obligatory upon the President to call into the service 35,000 volunteers, but permits him to do so; and when he does it, it directs that he shall organize them into 30 regiments, 3 of cavalry and 27 of infantry. And, Mr. Speaker, because this bill gives to the President the necessary power to increase temporarily the Regular Army to 65,000 men and the volunteer organization to 35,000 men—because it does this I favor the bill.

I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has been most severely and unjustly criticised in the House and outside of the House. It is not the best bill that could be framed, but as a temporary measure it will meet present requirements and is the best that the country can expect to get at this late date in the session; and I hope it will receive the substantial support of both sides of the House. [Applause.]

Now I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, General HENDERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, we have had sharp differences of opinion in the House, as members well know, in respect to an Army bill. There have been sharp differences between the two Houses also in that regard. We are at the close of a session of Congress with these sharp differences of opinion still existing between the two bodies.

It is well known from the utterances of myself before on the same question that I am against a great standing army. I do not see the need for it in our country and under our system of government.

But this bill, in my judgment, is a bill that, at the present time, is the best attainable under the conditions that exist in the House and in the Senate. It leaves the Army in a condition where the country can at least be protected in all of its interests, and we have only a short time—for we will be in session again in December next—only a short time in which to try the experiment of the pending bill. In December, if it be necessary, legislation can be effected to meet requirements that may arise.

I think the bill is sufficient for the present conditions; and we can shape it, if future necessities require it, on a different model.

My friends on both sides of the Chamber know that we are surrounded by difficulties which make it impossible to do very much in the brief time remaining of the session; and this seems to be the best that can be accomplished at least at the present time. It is, in my opinion, this bill or no legislation. I will vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. MARSH. I yield now to my colleague [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am not very familiar with the organization of the Army, but I do believe, from the best information I can acquire, that with regard to the coming two years the bill now before us will be satisfactory; that it will give us 100,000 fighting men, if that number be necessary for the defense of the United States and for use in the Army, and will enable the Executive of the nation to provide the necessary forces to meet any requirements that may arise in that time.

Now, it may not be perfect as to officers, it may not be perfect as to men, but, after all, what we want in the immediate future is the men to uphold the flag and defend our common country, and preserve order, if needed. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has well said, Congress will meet again in December next, and if the welfare of the public service requires more legislation as we get more light touching our outlying territories, then Congress can give the legislation. I believe, with the Senate constituted as it is, that this is the best legislation we can get, and that we must choose between this legislation and an extraordinary session. I believe this will answer the purpose, and therefore I shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. MARSH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, if I could frame a bill to suit myself, I would vote down this proposition. If I believed that it were possible that after the defeat of this measure as it presents itself here now some more satisfactory measure could be acted upon in time for our adjournment on Saturday, I would vote to defeat this measure.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are on the eve of adjournment. It is highly and vitally important that we have time to consider some of the important measures that are yet to come before us. There is one feature of this measure which I like and which commands my hearty support, and that is this: We are as much in the dark as to the necessity of a very large permanent establishment to-day as we are in regard to any other matter which has grown out of the acquisition of these new territories. Therefore it is safe for us to plant ourselves upon a temporary organization, a temporary establishment that can be remodeled and changed as later information gives us data upon which to act. Therefore, inasmuch as this bill gives to the President the contingent power that is necessary, I shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. MARSH. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with this grave and serious situation: We must either pass this bill, in my judgment, just as it is, or there will be no Army legislation at this session of Congress. That is the alternative. If we do not pass this bill it will necessitate an extraordinary session of Congress.

I want to do all that I can to obviate an extraordinary session of Congress. Every Democrat here should do all he can to avoid an extraordinary session of Congress. Although this bill is not perfect and does not meet with all of the requirements I would desire as a member of the committee, still, as the best thing we can get—as a fair compromise—I am in favor of it, and shall do all I can to pass it.

Fifty-five members of the Senate voted for it and only thirteen voted against it. Any delay, any amendment now will kill the bill, and the President will be obliged to call an extra session. The so-called Hull bill was opposed by the Democrats, and the latter, under the leadership of Senator GORMAN, suggested this proposition, the Republicans of the Senate assented to it, and we will be derelict in our fidelity to the Democrats in the other branch of the Legislature if we now impede or defeat this bill.

I trust that every Democrat who sympathizes with the men in arms at Manila, with our soldiers and sailors in the Philippines, will uphold at this critical moment the hands of the President and give him the power vested in him by the terms of this bill. I am a partisan, but in times like these I always subordinate my partisanship to my patriotism. We should all be patriots to-day. We must not forget, we must not forsake our brave and heroic soldiers and sailors who are upholding and defending our flag in the Orient. We must all stand by them.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman had more time than I have, in which he talked about the people in the Philippine Islands. I have only a few minutes. I trust I shall not be interrupted, although I would like to accommodate my friend.

Mr. STEELE. I will give you the time to answer a question.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. STEELE. I will give you a minute in which to answer it.

Mr. SULZER. I thank the gentleman from Indiana. Yes; I will now yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to know, if the proviso commencing in line 4, on page 13, is repealed, if it would not leave a standing army of over a hundred thousand men?

Mr. SULZER. No, sir; it would not, and I will tell you why. That proviso can not be repealed. It would be just as hard to repeal that proviso as it would be to pass a bill for a standing army of 100,000 men. It will never be done—take my word for it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will you please tell me why?

Mr. SULZER. In the first place, it is not repealed, and it will not be repealed. In the next place if it were repealed—

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is not an answer to the question.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, well, the gentleman's question supposes something which does not exist. It is based on a supposition which will never arise. We are going to pass this bill. It will give the President all the power—all the men—he asks for now to suppress the insurrection. It will cease to be operative after July 1, 1901.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from New York allow me?

Mr. SULZER. Yes. I am always glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The enlistments under this bill would not be affected by the repeal of the proviso.

Mr. SULZER. That is quite true. In the first place, we are not going to repeal that proviso. In my opinion, no attempt will ever be made to do that. We should pass this bill, if we pass it at all, in its entirety. Any change in it now means its defeat and an extra session, when a permanent Regular Army bill will be passed. We can not evade the responsibility or avoid the positive alternative. By the passage of this bill now it seems to me we gain all we have contended for.

This bill is only a temporary measure. It will cease to be operative in 1901. The increase is only temporary. There is nothing permanent about it. It simply meets the present emergency.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not think the gentleman caught the point of my question.

Mr. SULZER (continuing). Oh, yes; I think I have. And I hope the gentleman has grasped the importance of my reply. The responsibility for all that is now going on rests on the Administration. I do not think it is good policy to embarrass the Administration merely for political advantages. This bill can do no harm. It becomes a nullity and repeals itself on the 1st day of July, 1901. Until then it gives the President all he has asked for.

I was opposed to and voted against the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] because I am opposed to increasing the Regular Army to the extent he wanted to increase it. I thought the gentleman in the committee this morning favored this bill and would do so on the floor, but he has stood up here this afternoon and used every argument he can think of against the bill. I hope the members of the House will realize how important it is to pass this bill. Its failure now would be a calamity—an affront to every man in the Philippines.

The bill is not a perfect one. It is a compromise bill. It is only a temporary measure, and will cease to be a law on July 1, 1901. But, take it all in all, it does great credit to its author, and, in my opinion, I can not see how a Republican or a Democrat can consistently vote against it. It gives the President all the men he wants to meet the present emergency, and at the same time it does not increase the standing army a single man. After July 1, 1901, by virtue of this bill, the Regular Army will be just the same as it was before war was declared against Spain. By that time, let us hope, the country will be at peace with all the world and the insurrection in the Philippines a thing of the past. This is no time to be captious. This is no time to split hairs or play small politics. We should do our duty. We should do what is right, and the people will judge us accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, just a few words more. My time is nearly exhausted. Some criticism has been made against the bill because it makes the chief of the record department a brigadier-general. The chief of that department is Col. F. C. Ainsworth, and a more efficient, a more competent, and a more industrious gentleman never lived. He is entitled to this promotion. He has made the record division of the War Department a model. His system has never been excelled, and the facility with which he can furnish the record of every soldier who was in any war in the United States is one of the marvels of the century. He has saved the Government thousands and thousands of dollars. When he took hold of that division it was in confusion—no one could find a record or tell anything about the history of the soldiers of the Union. Out of chaos he brought order, detail, and system, the best in the world.

The great work he has done is a monument to human effort, human endurance, and human ingenuity. Every member of this House is indebted to Colonel Ainsworth. No one who knows the facts and who has the slightest sense of gratitude will oppose his deserved advancement. He has earned, he merits, and a just recognition of his worth and services warrants this promotion. In my opinion it is one of the best provisions in the bill. I am always glad to speak a good word for an efficient, an honest, a competent, and a faithful public servant. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MARSH. I call upon the gentlemen on the other side to consume some of their time.

Mr. STEELE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with a good deal of diffidence that I oppose the views expressed by the leaders, the recognized leaders, of the Republican side of this House; but I can not stand idly by and see this bill passed, if it is to be passed, without entering my protest, first against the bill itself, which it is admitted by those who propose to vote for it is not such a bill as we ought to put upon the statute books; but more than that, I am opposed to this continual threat by which this bill, as it were, is forced down our throats by the statement that we can not get a better bill if we do not take this.

I for one, as a member of this House, have become tired of being compelled by a mere minority of the membership of that House who first coerced their colleagues in the Senate, and then coerced the President of the United States to give his assent to this bill, and then come over on this side of the Capitol and coerce this independent legislative body to do as they, a mere minority, chose to dictate.

This bill ought never to pass; and if it does pass in this House, I for one, much as I would regret to see it, and I know no one who would suffer probably more inconvenience, would be willing to come here in extraordinary session and pass such a bill as we ought to pass for the reorganization of the Army. I shall vote against the consideration of the bill under such circumstances that we can not amend it. I do not think in doing that I am voting against the Administration, and I am not voting against the boys who are fighting at Manila, but voting to strengthen the arm of the President.

In one part of the bill it is provided that there shall be a certain number of companies, the number in the companies, the number of regiments, providing for a total that can be easily figured out—something less than 30,000; and yet there is an additional proviso which states that it shall not exceed 65,000. These two conflict with each other, and I can see no way to harmonize them except to amend this bill, which we can not do.

I have called attention, in an inquiry made of the chairman of the committee, to the rank injustice done in section 13 of this bill, where two men who have never seen a day's service in the Engineer Corps of the Army act as majors—men who have never been examined for promotion, who know nothing about the improvements that are going on throughout the country; and yet, as majors of engineers, they will be put in charge of those improvements, and put in charge of men who know more in five minutes than they do in five weeks. It is a piece of favoritism that ought never to have been ingrafted in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on this side of the House who antagonize the annexation of the Philippine Islands have all insisted that it will be the cause of a vast expense to this Government. We commence with this bill to keep books with the Philippine Islands. This bill provides for 100,000 men, 29,000 for ordinary purposes, 71,000 for some extraordinary purposes for the next two years and six months.

Now, what are those extraordinary purposes? They exist either in Cuba or Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands. There is peace in Porto Rico; no rebellion in force there, no discord, and consequently there is no need for them there. It is understood by the people who have gone to Cuba that in a short time our troops will retire from there, and so there is little need for troops in Cuba. Certainly, then, the 71,000 men is needed entirely to carry out the purposes of this Administration in the Philippine Islands. That 71,000 men necessarily entails a cost of about $80,000,000 or $90,000,000, and as we proceed with the further appropriations, we shall see how expensive will become our experience and venture in the Philippine Islands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to voting troops to conquer the Philippine Islands until we have declared our policy in reference thereto. If I had my way, I would pass through the House and through the Senate a resolution giving the people in the Philippine Islands precisely the same rights and the same privileges that have been extended to those in Cuba. Then, in the meantime, while we occupy the Philippine Islands, our power and good offices should be exercised to enable those people to create a good, independent government. And then after that is done I favor withdrawing on reasonable terms, they paying us $20,000,000 and giving us a coaling station in that island.

Now, in reference to this bill, there is one feature of it which ought to meet the universal disapproval of this House. This bill provides that there shall be enlisted men by organization. Now, there is no way for an organization to act, except by a majority of the members or individuals that constitute the organization. When an individual joins, he joins of his own free will and accord. Any organization, whether a corporation or not, can only act by a majority of its constituent members. Consequently, if these troops are to be enlisted in Philippine Islands by organization, the only way they can be enlisted is by a vote of the majority of the members of that organization, and when the majority has voted to enlist, the minority will be conscripted and forced to enlist. Unless this is true, there is no necessity for having the term "organization" in the bill.

It is not optional with every man to say whether he will serve or not. I shall never vote for a bill that compels a man, because he is a member of an organization or a company, to serve in the tropical country of the Philippines, Cuba, or Porto Rico without his consent. I shall never vote to force a man to go into a war of conquest or oppression, and I say now that I can see no use or occasion to say that they shall be enlisted by organization, unless that vote is to be taken by a majority of its members.

Now, there are other objections which I have to this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has said that this is a Democratic measure. I deny the proposition. I deny that the Democratic side of this Chamber is willing to vote for 71,000 men to be sent to the Philippine Islands before this Administration has declared its purpose toward the inhabitants of those islands.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Did it not come as a proposition from the Democratic side of the Senate?

Mr. SWANSON. A few Democratic Senators can not commit me to any policy. I say it is opposed to Democratic doctrine, Democratic ideas, and Democratic position upon the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SULZER. Did not the Democrats in the Senate vote for the bill?

Mr. SWANSON. No; not the two Senators from Virginia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order that what was done in the Senate is not subject to debate in the House. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is right.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is my judgment that this bill ought not to pass in this way. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that if it is absolutely necessary that it should pass, that nothing better can be done than this another day, to-morrow or the next day may be assigned, and then we may have action. But for us to take a bill of this importance, that has never had one moment of consideration, I am told, in the other House, has had no consideration in this House, is a mistake, until we have exhausted every means of securing something that is better.

Is it not possible for us to take this bill and so amend it as to put it in conference with the hope of doing something better? This bill must be radically wrong. I find that a company may be composed of 43 men or it may be composed of 129 men. The total enlisted force may be 23,000 men or the total enlisted force may be 65,000 men. A regiment may consist of 517 men or it may consist of 1,547 men; and yet the same number of officers is had in each case. If there are no more than enough for 517 men, then there are not enough for a regiment of 1,500 men.

Mr. MARSH. Will my friend allow me a suggestion? The House bill that he voted for provided that there should be a regiment of 720 men or a regiment of 1,740 men.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care, Mr. Speaker, whether that was in the other bill or not; but I know this, there was no imperative necessity imposed there as there is here.

The conditions are different. We have too many officers in the one case or not enough in the other. If 517 officers are enough, and only enough, to command the organization with companies numbering 43, surely they are not enough when the companies are increased to 129 men.

Rather than have an extra session I would vote for this bill, but I do not believe the time has yet arrived when that alternative is presented to me. The time that the committee might use has not yet been used. They have time and opportunity yet to seek a better bill than this. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MARSH. How much time has the gentleman from Indiana left?

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. MARSH. And how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. MARSH. I call upon the gentleman from Indiana to yield some of his time.

Mr. STEELE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire any five minutes. I will yield back to the gentleman whatever time I do not use. The gentleman from New York, however, said that I had been using every argument that I could against this bill. I want to say that I simply called attention to what the bill provided; that is all. If that constitutes an argument against the bill, it was an argument contained in the bill itself. I said in addition that I should vote for the bill, because I believed it was all we could get at this session, and we must either take this or take the chances of having no legislation. If this were an original proposition, if the whole question were open and we had time to discuss and amend and debate it, then, as I stated explicitly, I would not vote for the bill. And I made my explanation of what the bill provided simply because I believed the House should have the information in regard to that matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one other word. I do not believe that this House can get any other bill than this, because I do not believe that the Senate will pass any bill other than this. We are brought face to face with that condition of affairs. For that reason, and for the further reason which I have stated, that the bill gives the President 100,000 fighting men for two years, I shall vote for it, but simply as a last resort. I do not claim to like it.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand, the alternative is to take this bill or an extra session.

Mr. HULL. I think that is it exactly.

Mr. HOPKINS. And the President prefers this bill to an extra session.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. For the reason stated in the Post the other day—because it will give him nine months in which to exercise control over our newly acquired territory without any interference by Congress.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish the gentleman from Iowa would explain the provision in the bill which says that the President may enlist volunteers either individually or by organizations.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe that that provision would cause a single man to be taken into the service who did not voluntarily go in. The same provision was in our bill of last spring in regard to guard organization. In nearly all the National Guard companies half of the men stayed at home and the other half enlisted. No one was conscripted.

In answer to the gentleman from Virginia, I will say that I do not believe that the President can under this bill conscript a single man. He can get enough men without anything of that kind.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWANSON. How could the men be enlisted as an organization except by the voice of the majority of the members of that organization?

Mr. HULL. The construction was that the officers as an organization would come in, and the enlisted men who did not want to volunteer could step out, just as members of the National Guard did.

Mr. MARSH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe that we must take this bill or an extraordinary session of Congress, and as a choice between these two I will take this bill [applause], provided the gentleman in charge of it will say that it does not give the President of the United States power to conscript unwilling volunteers.

Mr. HULL. I will say this (though I may be giving a little more of private conversation than I should), that I talked with the President on that subject, and he said that he did not regard the provisions of this bill as giving him any right to conscript a single man; that if he had to resort to conscription he would convene Congress to secure that right. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. He will use no power not clearly given.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friends on this side that for two weeks we assailed our adversaries on that side because they would not meet what we hope is a temporary condition by a temporary provision for it. They did not yield to our arguments or our entreaties, but at the other end of the Capitol their bill to permanently increase the Army was met by a greater power of resistance, and they were compelled there to take a bill which by its very terms must expire in two years, and I believe it better to take this temporary provision, with all of its defects, than to force, if it were within our power, an extraordinary session of Congress, which would certainly be followed by a bill to permanently increase the standing army of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I rise to a question of high privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to say that when the Republican party is in power we have to choose between two evils, and we had better take the lesser one.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I object to the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Iowa committing either party to what the policy of this Government is.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman from Indiana consume some of his time?

Mr. STEELE rose.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose this motion of the gentleman from Iowa should be negatived now, would it not be in order for him on to-morrow or a subsequent day to make the same motion?

Mr. PAYNE. Would not that depend upon whether the bill was here or in the Senate?

The SPEAKER. That would depend upon a variety of conditions. The Chair would not like to rule upon that question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Provided there was no further action than simply a negative vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does it not take a great deal of time to prepare this bill to be signed by the Speaker, the Vice-President, and the President? So, if it passes at this session, it must pass now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] is entitled to the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, the House recently passed what it considered to be a sensible Army reorganization bill and sent it to the Senate of the United States. That body carefully considered the measure sent to it, and one Senator was led to say in the course of his remarks that the House bill as amended—a bill entirely different from this—

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order that it is not in order to repeat what has been said in the other body.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to comment on what is said in the Senate.

Mr. STEELE. I am not commenting. I have seen in the public press the statement by a Senator of long experience—

Mr. FLEMING. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. STEELE. That the bill that was amended by the Military Committee of the Senate was right as between God and man. And the press of the country informs us that another Senator said: "You will take the bill now under consideration or no bill, or we will have an extraordinary session." Now, the question is, Shall one man in this country hold us up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will not allude to what has taken place in the other body.

Mr. STEELE. I will not. You know what I was going to say. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The comity between two legislative bodies requires that anything that would have a tendency to lead to irritation between the two should be suppressed.

Mr. STEELE. I will not refer to it. This is not the bill that we expected to have here, and we are told now by the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, the chairman of that committee [Mr. HULL] leading, I am sorry to say, that we must have this—what shall I call it—or no bill. Why is it so? Why, only a few minutes ago a bill passed this House carrying nearly $22,000,000, which has to go to the Senate and be considered.

Can not the House consider a bill that does not suit it any better than the deficiency bill will suit another body in as short a time? Is there no means of taking care of ourselves and having legislation that some one may be satisfied with? Not a member on this floor has said that the bill that we are going, in all probability, to pass by suspension of the rules is satisfactory to him. Every member who has risen has said it has a great many defects in it, and it has. Why, the Executive Department has had two bureaus, judicial, of the Government passing upon its provisions to see whether or not its sections can be made to harmonize, and those bureaus disagree. We may have an army of 23,000 men or we may have an army of over 100,000 men by this bill.

Mr. HULL. One hundred thousand.

Mr. STEELE. Over 100,000, if they shall harmonize it. We may have of commissioned officers and noncommissioned officers and cooks one for every enlisted man and two-thirds. The bill is top-heavy, even in time of war.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not true that we may have a permanent army of 100,000 men by the repeal of thirteen lines of this bill.

Mr. STEELE. Well, we may have chaos by thirteen lines of legislation in this House. I am not prepared to say what we may have; but I know that when the measure was considered in some other parliamentary body of this country, and after it was settled that a certain number of men should constitute the force of the Army after July 1, 1901, any old kind of an amendment went in without controversy, and the House is proposing to take the bill as it passed with all of its defects as an ultimatum. Why not try to correct some of its worst defects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I am sorry I have not more time.

Mr. MARSH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

[Mr. SHAFROTH addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MARSH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JETT].

Mr. JETT. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I gave my consent to report this bill, not because of the fact that I thought it was a correct measure, not that I felt that I would like to see it adopted; but if we were to have legislation of this character, I believed it was the very best that we could expect at this time. I prefer this to the Hull bill that did pass this House. I believe we would be infinitely worse off by not passing this bill at this time, and there should be a special session of Congress, when legislation of this character would be enacted. I am willing to accept this in preference to a measure that would be worse, in my judgment, if we are to have Congress assemble again for the purpose of enacting legislation upon this line.

Again, in my judgment, it is best that we should pass it because it was our opposition so strenuously entered to the increase of the standing army a few days ago that has brought about the great concessions that have been made to us. This is not a permanent organization. It is not seeking a permanent establishment. If it were, I would not support it; and I repeat that it was by reason of the fact of the strenuous opposition made upon this floor by the minority a few days ago that the concessions that have been made were made in the provisions of this bill.

Some gentlemen say that it is a permanent organization. I dispute that fact. I desire only to call your attention to the bottom of page 9, which reads, "That such increase of the regular and volunteer forces shall continue in service only during the necessity therefor, and not later than July 1, 1901."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MARSH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is best for the country, and therefore best for the Democratic party, to accept this compromise bill. I believe it for four reasons:

First. Because if we do not accept it, we will have to accept whatever bill an extra session gives us, such is the situation in the Senate. No man doubts that from a Democratic standpoint such a bill would be worse than this one.

Second. Because this does away with the character of permanency in the organization of the Army, and therefore the Army organized under it is not a standing army. It will be a temporary army altogether. It is a compromise substitute for a standing army bill. All Democrats want to prevent a large standing or permanent army.

In the next place, Mr. Chairman, because it reduces the number of officers below that which the Committee on Military Affairs wanted to provide for; in fact, the number of officers are less than the number provided for in the minority substitute bill, which we ourselves voted for to take the place of the original bill of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is mistaken in that fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If I am, that is my information.

Mr. HAY. Your information is wrong.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is based on the fact that our substitute bill provided for 50 regiments and this bill provides for only 30, as I understand. That is my information.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Just let me go on one second and you can correct me later if you want to.

Mr. HAY. I will correct it, if the gentleman will give me an opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Correct me later, and I will correct it in the RECORD; but my time is running.

Now, in the fourth place, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of it because it is a compromise bill proposed by members of the Democratic party in the Senate to get rid of the menace of a permanent standing army and its vast expense, its danger to the liberties of the people. It will require affirmative legislation to continue the Army herein provided for in existence after 1901, whereas if you had the sort of bill that the Republican party wanted, and which the extra session would fix on us, it would take affirmative legislation to get rid of it. For these reasons I am for it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BRUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend that by allowing all gentlemen to print remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BRUCKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that after the vote there are a few matters on the Speaker's table that should be cleared up. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were refused, 11 gentlemen only rising—not a sufficient number.

The question on suspending the rules and passing the bill was then taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HENRY of Texas) there were 203 yeas and 32 noes.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended and the bill is passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill No. 1056, to provide for a public building at Cleveland, Ohio, in which the Senate nonconcur in the House amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to occupy an hour after matters are cleared from the Speaker's table.

Mr. BARRETT. I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to stay here any later, and I object.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. You are not obliged to stay here.

The SPEAKER. The question is on insisting on the House amendment and agreeing to a conference.

The question was taken; and the House insisted on its amendment and agreed to a conference.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MERCER, Mr. HICKS, and Mr. BANKHEAD.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STOCKTON, CAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill 11892, to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Stockton, Cal., and make provision for the acquisition of land for a new site thereof, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. This will require unanimous consent. It is a bill for a public building passed by the House, and amended by the Senate by the introduction of a section providing for another public building.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, that ought not to be done.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADMIRAL OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back the following bill (S. 352) creating the office of admiral in the Navy, and ask for its immediate consideration and passage. It is a bill passed by the Senate providing for the creation of the grade of admiral in the Navy, for the purpose of enabling the President to appoint Admiral Dewey to that office. A similar provision was put into the naval appropriation bill the other day, but this does not affect the naval bill, and that is still pending. This has been unanimously reported back, and I have been trying to secure an opportunity for its consideration for two or three days.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does it fix the salary?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; the salary is already fixed in the naval personnel bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This is almost identical with the provision passed the other day in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BAILEY. It relates only to that?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Only that, and it will send the measure directly to the President.

Mr. LOUD. What became of the other bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if there is a provision in the personnel bill as to the salary, what the amount is?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not informed as to that subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A member of the Naval Affairs Committee has told me that there is nothing in the personnel bill fixing the salary, and I think that if this is so that an amendment should be offered to this resolution providing an adequate salary for the officer whom this resolution is intended to honor.

I for one can not see how Admiral Dewey can receive the pay that he will be entitled to when this resolution becomes a law and he is nominated by the President, and inasmuch as we have the opportunity now to arrange this matter, I can not see why it is not done. However, I will not persist further in this matter if my suggestion is to be construed as an objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by selection and promotion, an admiral of the Navy, who shall not be placed upon the retired list except upon his own application; and whenever such office shall be vacated by death or otherwise the office shall cease to exist.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to object; but I am informed by a member of the Naval Affairs Committee that there is no provision in the naval personnel bill which will give the officer provided for by this bill a salary. That is the information given me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. If that is the case, I think we ought to amend the bill here. There will be no trouble in getting the amendment through the Senate.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This is a Senate bill. I hope no member will object. I ask for a vote.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The question having been taken on the passage of the bill,

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair should state and the RECORD should show that this bill has passed unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The yeas have it; and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOCKPORT, N. Y.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 500) for the erection of a public building at Lockport, N. Y.

The amendment (providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at New Brighton, Pa.) was read.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the same category as the preceding bill, and the action upon it which the gentleman from Nebraska proposes will require unanimous consent.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MERCER, Mr. HICKS, and Mr. BANKHEAD as conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TAMPA, FLA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 414) for the erection of a public building at Tampa, Fla.

The amendments were read.

Mr. MERCER. I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and request a conference.

Mr. STEELE. How much does the Senate amendment increase the amount?

Mr. MERCER. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. STEELE. Is that all?

Mr. HANDY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does this bill require unanimous consent for its consideration now?

The SPEAKER. The distinction is that this bill merely increases the amount; in the other bills a new object was added, which the House had not considered, and which, under our rules, should be sent to the Committee of the Whole House. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MERCER, Mr. HICKS, and Mr. BANKHEAD as conferees on the part of the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BALTIMORE, MD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 710) to provide for the purchase of additional land in the square now occupied by the custom-house in the city of Baltimore, Md., for the erection of a new public building thereon, for the accommodation of the Government service in said city.

The SPEAKER. On this bill the Senate has disagreed to the amendment of the House and asked a conference.

Mr. MERCER. I move that the House insist on its amendment and agree to the conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MERCER, Mr. HICKS, and Mr. BANKHEAD as conferees on the part of the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STOCKTON, CAL.

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, through a misunderstanding of the matter before the House, I objected to the consideration of a House bill returned from the Senate with amendment, the bill providing for a public building at Stockton, Cal. I wish now to withdraw that objection.

The bill (H. R. 11882) to increase the limit of cost for the erection of a public building at Stockton, Cal., and making provision for the acquisition of additional land for a new site therefor, was again laid before the House with the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MERCER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be disagreed to and that we ask a conference.

Mr. CANNON. What is the object of this bill?

Mr. MERCER. It provides for a new post-office building.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that this is a House bill for the erection of a public building at Stockton, and it has been amended in the Senate so as to provide for the erection of a public building in another city. Now, I have no desire to object so as to embarrass anybody; but I do object to this method of legislation.

Mr. MERCER. I promise the gentleman that the House shall have a chance to act on this before anything is done.

Mr. DOCKERY. And you will stand by the House?

Mr. MERCER. I will stand by the House, of course.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MERCER, Mr. HICKS, and Mr. BANKHEAD as conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. As this makes an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States it requires unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will let this go over until the first thing in the morning. A new question is raised there.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before I consent, I desire to ask—

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to take it up.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will let this go over until the first thing in the morning. I will look at it. I think there will be no trouble about it.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 2, 1899.

The Senate met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Therefore, as in thought and love we stand by the coffin-side of our kinsman, friend, and brother who came from across the sea upon the blessed mission of peacemaker, we draw nigh to Thee to ask for Thy succor and comfort and cheer. The bearer of an illustrious name, which he has made more noble by his conduct and character, showing forth the finest influences and principles of a great and good man worthily representing his great nation and helping to draw more closely the bonds of kinship, good understanding, and affection between the motherland and the daughter upon this side of the water, he has left a great and glorious reputation. Grant, we beseech Thee, that the wife who has been widowed and the children made fatherless may be dear to Thee, defended, upheld, and comforted by Thee.

O Lord, grant that these great and good men who have labored and are still laboring for a good understanding between these nations may receive Thy heavenly benediction. Keep us all, O Lord, under the shadow of Thy wing. We humbly ask Thee, through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the prayer by the Chaplain be inserted in the RECORD.

I hope that will be done. I now report favorably and without amendment, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill (H. R. 6062) for the relief of Anson W. Mr. COCKRELL. Are the copies to be printed only for the use of the committee?

Mr. LODGE. For the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution does not say so. It says "for the use of the committee." I think the resolution should be amended.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it should be amended, as that is a mistake.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then, let it be amended by inserting "Senate" in the place of "Committee on Education and Labor," so as to read "for the use of the Senate."

RESERVOIRS FOR IRRIGATION.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by Mr. WARREN February 25,

1890, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That there be printed 5,000 copies of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture to the President of the United States regarding the practical usefulness of reservoirs to agriculture in the irrigated region of the United States, 3,000 of which shall be for the use of the Department of Agriculture and 2,000 for the use of the Senate.

INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by Mr. PETTIGREW February 28, 1899, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and it hereby is, authorized to continue investigations authorized by resolutions of July 13, 1897, February 7, 1898, and January 30, 1899, during the present session of the Senate, and to continue said investigations during the recess of Congress until the beginning of the next session. And such funds as are necessary to make said investigations are hereby authorized and directed to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

CONTRACTS FOR MILITARY SUPPLIES.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11879) to amend an act entitled "An act to suspend the operations of certain provisions of law relating to the War Department, and for other purposes," to report it favorably without amendment, and as it is a very important matter of business, I ask to have it immediately considered.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I wish to make a single remark. I had a bill passed yesterday morning, and a motion was entered to reconsider it by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW]. I tried all during the day to have that motion considered. I was promised last night that there would be no difficulty about it this morning, and unless I can get an opportunity to have that motion acted upon this morning I shall have to object to the passage of other bills. I do not want to be ungracious about it, but I wish an opportunity to have a vote taken on that motion. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill the Senator from Connecticut has reported, but I will ask that the vote be taken on the other bill as soon as that is disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sorry; but I tried all day yesterday to find an opportunity to get this bill considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to consider the motion made by the Senator from South Dakota to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. The bill was passed yesterday morning. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] has a right to the floor on another bill, but he has kindly consented to yield to me in this matter, and it will take but a few moments.

The bill was passed. The Senator from South Dakota entered a motion to reconsider the vote, and I have made a motion to table the motion to reconsider. I wish to withdraw the motion to table temporarily in order to let the Senator from South Dakota state why he desires the reconsideration, and it will not take me two minutes to reply. I hope that I can get the consent of the Senate at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek nations in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw temporarily the motion to table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I made the motion to reconsider this bill for the reason that we have passed a general law allowing railroads the right of way over Indian reservations and Indian allotments. A large number of bills of this sort for different railroad companies were before the Committee on Indian Affairs. Some are on the Calendar. Some have passed either the Senate or the other House. The consideration of these various bills took almost the entire time of the committee, and therefore we drew and had passed a general law under which any railroad company, by securing the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and by filing a map of the location of the line, etc., and paying the damages, can get a right of way over Indian lands.

Great pressure was brought to bear to have all the separate bills go through, this bill among the others, but as chairman of the committee I said to the different parties, and there were a great many of them, that I should object to the passage of any of these separate bills, so that every one would be on the same footing and all would be treated alike, and that they would have to resort to the provisions of the general law, so far as the committee was concerned, in order to secure these rights of way.

In my absence yesterday morning this bill was passed. When I returned to the Senate, in pursuance of the understanding which has been had with almost every one, I moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I think it should be reconsidered and the action in its favor revoked by Congress.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, before the bill to which the Senator alludes—a general bill—was passed this company had been organized, had incurred expenses, etc. It had been the custom to grant rights of way to railroads wherever they were to be constructed in good faith through the Territory. The bill passed the House and went to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was unanimously reported back to the Senate, and my colleague, who is now sick, had it in charge and attempted to have it passed, but objection was made.

I do not know who are these parties who constitute the corporation, except that I know the people of the city of Fort Smith and all down there know that this company intend to build the road.

They have gone to this expense beforehand; the bill has passed the Senate, and it can do no possible hurt to any individual; whereas if they are forced to go on under the law as it now exists, the Secretary of the Interior may give the right of way to other parties and thereby discriminate against this company. It can do no hurt to any individual. It is not a matter of interest to South Dakota or Sioux Falls, but it is a matter of great interest to the people of Fort Smith; and having received telegrams from the commercial bodies and a number of friends day before yesterday, I asked the Vice-President to permit me to call up the bill, which he very kindly did, and it was passed.

I wired friends at Fort Smith that it had passed. I hope that it will stay passed, because, as I said before, no injury can come from it. It is just to those people and an injustice to nobody, and in order that it may stay passed I again make the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I trust the Senator from Arkansas will withdraw the motion. I wish to make an inquiry.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw it at the request of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Why will not this company have an opportunity, under the general right-of-way act that we have passed, to get authority to build this road, the same as any other parties seeking a right of way in the Indian Territory or elsewhere? In other words, I wish to ask this question: Can not the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company get the right to construct their road under the general law?

Mr. BERRY. I have stated to the Senate already that they will have to take their chances with others, and if the Secretary of the Interior should be disposed to give the right of way to some other company, then he would have the power to do it, and it would work an injustice to this company, which has already an organization and has had passed its bill through the House, with a favorable report in the Senate. The reason why the people of Fort Smith have sent me telegrams is because they know this company intends to build the road. They do not know whether some other company that might get the right from the Secretary of the Interior would build it or not. Therefore I again move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—

Mr. BERRY. I hope we can have a vote on it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the Senator wants a fair understanding of this matter.

Mr. BERRY. I want to reach a vote upon it. I do not want to be cut out by an appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There will be plenty of time.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I inquire what is before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 11916 was passed.

Mr. LODGE. Is that morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It will take but a moment.

Mr. LODGE. If it is only here by unanimous consent—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That was the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to say just a word. Not knowing particularly about this case, I think it is very unfortunate that we should pass a general right-of-way bill which we intend shall take away from Congress the granting of rights of way through Indian reservations and leave it to the Secretary of the Interior, and then the very next day proceed to pass a special bill. It is setting a precedent which will be followed hereafter, I think, and make us trouble.

Mr. BERRY. The bill had already passed the House.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. In the case of a company that has made all its arrangements, raised the money, done the work, that is acting in perfectly good faith, as I know to be the fact, for I know the parties engaged in this enterprise—is it not more unjust to them now to discriminate against them, when they have already done this work, than to follow in the line of argument the Senator from Connecticut is making about the general law?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What work have they done?

Mr. VEST. They have made the survey; they have raised the money.

Mr. BERRY. And the bill was passed through the House and a favorable report made upon it here.

Mr. VEST. They did all that could be done before the general law was passed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But they had not any right of way.

Mr. VEST. They had not any right of way, but they had already made arrangements to obtain it, and they had their agents at work. They have done everything that was possible to be done, as I know. Not only is Fort Smith interested in this matter; people in other States are interested. The road ought to be built and it ought not to be delayed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduced for constituents of mine who are interested in a road passing through Indian reservations a bill giving them the right of way, and I was informed by the chairman of the committee that no such bills were to be passed; that a general act was to be passed, and that all could apply under that general law. It seemed to me that that was an eminently wise proceeding, and I so informed the gentlemen who were interested in this corporation, and who had entered into the work in just as good faith as in the case mentioned by the Senator from Missouri. I replied to the gentleman who wrote me that no such bill could be passed; that he would have to come in under the general law and make his application to the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, I am not alone in that. There are a number of other bills of the same kind. It seems to me that to select one railroad and immediately give it a right of way after passing a general act is extremely unfair to everybody else who has applied, and there are a number who have applied. To put them all aside and refuse them a right and then give it to another does not seem to me to be fair to others who applied in the same way.

Mr. BERRY. Now, Mr. President, just one word more, and that is all I shall have to say.

I repeat that this bill had passed the House and had been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. These rights have always been granted. These parties have a better right than any others because they have gone to the expense of raising the money, taking it for granted that the bill would go through as a matter of course. I say it would be exceedingly unfair to permit the Secretary of the Interior to grant that privilege to some one else and cut these parties out after they had taken all the steps I have enumerated.

Mr. VEST. Has the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers passed the House?

Mr. BERRY. Has the Senator's bill passed the House, and has it been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. LODGE. Mine had not, but others had passed the House.

Mr. BERRY. I renew my motion to table the motion to reconsider, and I hope I will now get a vote upon it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas withdraw the motion?

Mr. BERRY. I will withdraw it for the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. It seems to me that the Senator from Arkansas ought not to press the passage of this bill. There are numerous such bills before the Committee on Indian Affairs. Many of them have been reported. The Senator's colleague is a member of that committee. The general bill was framed, carefully considered, and reported in order to do away with the necessity of the committee considering and the Senate passing numerous special bills.

I do not think there is any real ground for urging the bill at this time. Under the general law, as I understand its provisions, there can be no discrimination against the company referred to by the Senator from Arkansas. I do not understand that he claims that any other company is making an application for a right of way there.

Mr. BERRY. If not, then I would ask the Senator from Utah, after this bill has passed both Houses, when the people of Fort Smith and that part of the country want it passed, why he should object to it? My colleague sought to pass it here. He is sick in bed, as is known to all Senators upon this floor. It was his bill that he had in charge. If it be true, then, no man can be injured by it, I do not think it is a fair argument to say because some other Senator can not get his bill through I ought not to be able to hold one that I have already had passed.

Mr. RAWLINS. I dislike very much to object to anything the Senator wants; but for the reason which he urges here for the passage of the bill other bills will also be passed, and we shall have nothing accomplished by the general law.

Mr. BERRY. I ask for a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from South Dakota to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. As he is absent, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. As he is absent, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SEWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TURLEY. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I notice that he has not yet come into the Chamber. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] that he transfer his pair with my colleague to the Senator from Washington, so that we can both vote. I will then let my vote stand.

Mr. PROCTOR. Very well. I vote "nay."

Mr. BACON. This being a matter not political, I will take the liberty of voting in the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I am paired. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—36.

NATIONAL WHITE CROSS OF AMERICA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5583) to incorporate the National White Cross of America, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it seems a little ungracious to impede even for a moment the progress of a bill which, on its face, seems to have such a wide domain of charity provided for, but the relation of the United States toward corporations is a peculiar one. It is very well known the Red Cross Society is a world-wide institution, approved and recognized by all the nations of the civilized world. Its operations and beneficence and activities are extended wherever suffering exists and wherever men and women need the protecting care of charity, and especially for those who are sufferers by the devastating effects of war.

The United States has by treaty, and by an undisputed exercise of the treaty-making power, recognized with other nations of the world this international institution, and the Red Cross has already occupied the field of beneficent and charitable endeavor both before and during the late war in a way which commended it to the thoughtful approbation of all good and patriotic citizens.

How far this National White Cross Society, apart from the question of the constitutional power of the United States to create such a corporation, is intended to invade that work—for even in the God-like work of benevolence there are competitions and jealousies and interferences—how far it is intended that this society shall invade the field that is already occupied by the international organization, the Red Cross, which exists and is recognized by the treaty-making power of the United States, I do not know.

Mr. ALLEN. I will state to the Senator—

Mr. GRAY. One moment. This I do know, that in my opinion the Congress of the United States is without the constitutional power to create such a corporation as is contemplated by this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Congress has created a dozen similar corporations or societies.

Mr. GRAY. That may be.

Mr. ALLEN. And I will say to the Senator from Delaware that there is not the slightest jealousy between this organization and the Red Cross, and that this organization has over fifty of its nurses in the field, and has had during the war. Some are in Manila at this time, and others are on their way there.

Mr. GRAY. I notice the bill undertakes to give power to hold real estate in any State of the United States. The powers of acquiring property and distributing it are very unlimited, and are somewhat extraordinary in an eleemosynary corporation such as this. I think we should be careful, although this comes in the guise of white-winged charity, in clothing corporations with such powers.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will examine the previous acts passed by Congress, he will find that the language of those acts is embraced in this bill.

Mr. GRAY. That may be.

Mr. ALLEN. How does it come, then, that this bill is unconstitutional and all the others are constitutional?

Mr. GRAY. I have not said that all the others are constitutional. I can only speak for myself and I can only speak from my own judgment, however imperfect that may be and however liable to error I may be. I only exercise the judgment of one Senator on this floor in regard to the duty of advocating or opposing measures which come before the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no interest in this bill one way or another, not the slightest, any more than the ordinary citizen has in the work of charity, but I must say that I am surprised that a bill of this kind should lead to a breath of suspicion being cast in the Senate upon this organization.

Mr. GRAY. I have not sought to create any suspicion, except that the field is already occupied by an institution called the Red Cross, which is recognized by the treaty-making power of the United States. That is all. It is not incorporated by the United States and it does not seek a charter from the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Does it follow that no other people can engage in that work?

Mr. GRAY. Not at all; but the source of power to create all these corporations exists in the States, and if you want to confine the corporation to the District of Columbia there is no trouble about that. I am only speaking of the precedent which I think is being set as one which will be a dangerous one in the future if we let these things go without comment, protest, or objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We are, or should be, very much interested in this subject, but the Senate can not hear anything that is being said.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it is very disagreeable to me to object to a matter which is espoused by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], for whose good will and high purposes in this matter, as in all others, I am ready to vouch, as well as for those of the good people whose names are mentioned as the incorporators in the first section of the bill. I only do it from a sense of duty, to call the attention of the Senate to the wide exercise of power which the passage of this bill will make necessary, far beyond any constitutional warrant which, in my opinion, exists.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill locates this corporation at Washington, in the District of Columbia, although its operations may be carried on anywhere in the United States, as necessarily they must be. Does not the fact that it is a localized corporation satisfy the Senator's troubles about a bill of this sort?

Mr. GRAY. I do not think it is a localized corporation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly it is.

Mr. GRAY. I said that there are sources of corporate power which might be appealed to in the States for corporations and to Congress where corporations in the District of Columbia are concerned, but this does not confine itself to the District of Columbia, nor is it a local corporation, like the Garfield Hospital.

Mr. CHANDLER. The corporation is located in the District of Columbia, and it has exactly the same powers throughout the United States as if it was incorporated in a State. What is the objection to that?

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand that the Senator from New Hampshire would go so far, good constitutional lawyer as he is, as to say that the fact that a corporation once locally created can exercise a large scope of activity and power in other States and places than that of its creation would warrant the creation of any corporation, no matter for what purpose or on what account.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say that in the District of Columbia you can have any corporation that you can have in New York City.

Mr. GRAY. Then you can pass any corporation bill here that it is possible for a legislative power anywhere to pass.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think so, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRAY. I must differ from the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, that portion of the language of the bill is literally taken from the act incorporating the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. President, I hope this bill may be put upon its passage.

Mr. GRAY. Then let the Senator make a motion to that effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. I object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. That can not be done, for the bill was reported this morning, and under the rule it goes over under objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to know the ipse dixit and final decree from the Senator from Missouri, who seems to be lord and master of the situation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am simply following the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I make the motion to take up the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion can not be entertained in the morning hour except by unanimous consent.

PACIFIC RAILROAD INVESTIGATION.

He also submitted an amendment proposing that in all cases where an officer or enlisted man in either the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, or contract surgeon, or trained nurse in the employ of the Government, has died while on duty away from home since January 1, 1898, and the remains have been taken home and buried at the expense of the family or friends of the deceased, the parties who paid the cost of transporting and burying such remains shall be repaid at the expense of the United States by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CRIMINAL CODE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to get up the Alaska bill, and thereafter will yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. There is a little matter that will not cause any discussion at all which I wish to have disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana says he will yield to the Senator from Nebraska later. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska, and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments as printed in the bill may be considered as agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not all of them.

Mr. CARTER. All except one.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT YORK, NEBR.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5466) for the erection of a public building at the city of York, in the State of Nebraska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase or receive the donation of a suitable site, and to contract for the erection thereon of a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices at York, in the State of Nebraska, not to exceed in cost the sum of $20,000.

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio, and will likewise yield to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], with the understanding that the bills will be laid aside if any discussion follows their presentation.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are going to consider all of these bills at a certain hour. Let us not take up this one now. Pension bills and such bills are to be considered later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be laid aside until 1 o'clock.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not aware of that fact. The bill is practically out of the way now.

That in all cases when the title or claim of any person out of possession of any real estate in the District of Columbia shall be barred by adverse possession, and the title thereto has vested in the party in possession or the party under whom he claims, the party holding a title which has vested by adverse possession may file a bill in equity, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, to have his title thereto perfected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "have," to strike out "of record;" and in line 5, before the word "title," to insert "a;" so as to read:

And in such action it shall not be necessary to make any person a party defendant, except such persons as may appear to have a claim or title adverse to that of the plaintiff. And upon the trial of such cause proof of the facts showing a title in the plaintiff by adverse possession shall entitle him to a decree of the court declaring his title by adverse possession, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, after the word "case," to strike out "the person whose adverse claim appears of record" and insert "an adverse claimant;" so as to read:

And if in any case an adverse claimant shall be dead, then the heirs, devisees, or allies of such person, or those claiming by, through, or under him, if known, shall be made defendants as adverse claimants, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 3, after the word

"owner," to insert "or claimant;" and in the same line, before the word "title," to strike out "record;" so as to read:

And service of process on such unknown persons shall be had by designating them in the published notice as the unknown heirs, devisees, or allies of the last known owner or claimant of the title; and when such service shall be had a decree shall be rendered the same as though personal service had been had.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, after the word "disabilities," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the entire period during which such rights shall be preserved shall not exceed twenty-two years from the time such rights accrued either in said claimant or in the person or persons under whom he claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. McMILLAN, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

CRIMINAL CODE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the Alaska bill. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8751) to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be agreed to, subject to amendment as the original text.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Subject to amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendments of the Senate committee are to be considered as a part of the original text?

Mr. CHANDLER. And the whole open to amendment?

Mr. CARTER. And the whole open to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendments are agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does that agree to the license amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not apply to that.

Mr. CARTER. It is subject to amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood when the bill was up before that a Senator whom I do not think is now present desired to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. It is the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The whole matter is open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The whole matter is open to amendment. The committee amendments have been adopted with that limitation.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In section 14, page 5, line 4, strike out the word "fourteen" and insert "sixteen."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the clause be reported as it will read.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the clause will read:

SEC. 14. That whoever has carnal knowledge of a female person, forcibly and against her will, or, being 16 years of age, carnally knows and abuses a female person under 16 years of age, with her consent, is guilty of rape.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, lines 2 and 3 of section 67, strike out "upon any inclosed lands or premises not his own" and in lieu thereof insert "on any lands or premises in the lawful occupation of any other."

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the place where I wish to offer an amendment. Let us hear the amendment again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. That is satisfactory to the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, in line 2, section 120 strike out the word "not;" and in lines 2 and 3 of said section strike out "except upon the complaint of the husband or wife and;" and in line 3 strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three;" and in the same line strike out "year" and insert "years."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the clause be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the clause will read.

That a prosecution for the crime of adultery shall be commenced within three years from the time of committing the crime or the time when the same shall come to the knowledge of such husband or wife.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Page 67, line 2, section 144, it is proposed to strike out the words "or marriage;" and in lines 4, 5, and 6 of the same section strike out "without the consent of such father, mother, guardian, or other person."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 91, line 4, amend section 201, Title I, by striking out all after the word "jails," in line 7 of said section, down to and including the word "employed," in line 16 on the following page, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That the United States marshal for said district may, under such regulations as the Attorney-General may prescribe, employ or cause to be employed upon public works any or all persons sentenced to imprisonment in the jails or the penitentiary within said district.

Mr. CARTER. The amendment is for the purpose of leaving the entire matter of dealing between the marshal and the Attorney-General without interference by the Government and to avoid confusion in that particular.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 98, after the word "summoned," in line 8 of section 13, insert "in each division of the court;" and on the same page, at the end of line 1, section 14, insert "who has been convicted of a felony nor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 126 I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 126, after the word "codified," in line 4 of section 122, insert "and for the trial of issues of fact in civil actions."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Page 230, after line 83, insert:
Wharfage at all public docks, wharves, and warehouses, 10 cents per ton on all freight and merchandise received or discharged.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 241 I offer what I send to the desk as an additional section, to be numbered 481.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by adding as a new section, on page 241, the following:

SEC. 481. That in any case where a conviction occurs, except in a case of murder or rape, the court may, when in its opinion the facts and circumstances are such as to make the minimum penalty provided in this act manifestly too severe, impose a less penalty, either fine or imprisonment, or both: Provided, That in any such case the court shall cause the reasons for its action to be set forth at large upon the record in the case.

Mr. GRAY. What page is that?

Mr. CARTER. Page 241.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the amendment be read again. There was so much noise we could not hear.

Mr. CARTER. Before the reading proceeds, to the end that the purpose of the amendment may be more generally understood, I will state that this amendment is presented at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He expressed the opinion that in all cases the minimum penalty should be omitted in the statutes except in the case of murder and its various degrees and in the case of rape. In order to leave some discretion with the court, notwithstanding the minimum penalties fixed by the various sections in this code, the particular amendment presented at the desk and now about to be read was prepared by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana if he has passed the provision which fixes the punishment for rape?

Mr. CARTER. The entire bill is subject to amendment, according to the understanding.

Mr. SPOONER. Where is that section?

Mr. CARTER. I will endeavor to find it in a moment.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like, as this matter may come up elsewhere, to say a word, in order that it may go on the Record. I will detain the Senate but a single moment. Ever since I came to the Senate, certainly ever since I went upon the Judiciary Committee, whenever the attention of the Senate has been called to the matter, it has with almost entire unanimity voted against the imposition of what are called minimum penalties; that is, in all cases making it obligatory upon the court to impose a fine of a certain amount or imprisonment of a certain length. The experience of every lawyer, I think, is that that is peculiarly sound policy in the matter of the criminal jurisprudence of the United States, where, as to Alaska, as this case is, or Oregon or California, the pardoning power and the directing power of prosecution is at Washington, and can only be reached after a long time and at great cost and by traveling a great distance.

Now, one illustration is as good as a thousand. I myself was cognizant of a case where the minimum penalty for an offense against the revenue law—selling tobacco without a license, I think it was, but some offense of that kind—was imprisonment. There was no discretion in the court, and the man had acted in ignorance or had construed wrongly, as it proved, a very doubtful provision of law. He supposed he was doing what he had a right to do, and the man had a condition of his lungs which made it probable that six months' imprisonment would end his life, whereas being at liberty would save it, or it might be saved. It was necessary to send to Washington to get first the consent of the Treasury Department and then the consent of the Attorney-General's Office, in order to have the case put on file without pressing it to judgment and sentence. Hundreds of such cases could undoubtedly be put by different Senators.

Mr. SPOONER. I will ask the Senator from Montana to turn again to section 144.

Mr. GRAY. On what page?

Mr. SPOONER. Page 67.

Mr. CARTER. I have before me the section referred to.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senate has amended that section so as to strike out the words "or marriage." I submit to him that that amendment ought not to be made. It reads:

That if any person shall for purposes of prostitution or marriage take away any female under the age of 16 years from her father, mother, guardian, or other person having legal charge of her person—

He shall be punished. Under the bill as the Senator has had it amended a man can entice a girl 11 years of age or 12 years of age for marriage. That ought to be prohibited.

Mr. CARTER. In another section of the proposed statute he would be subject to punishment for marrying without the consent of the guardian or other person.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the limit as to age?

Mr. CARTER. The limit is 16.

Mr. SPOONER. In the other part of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. I understand that to be the fact. I will look it up. But I have no objection to the reconsideration of that part of the amendment which involves striking out the words "or marriage." I accept that from the Senator from Wisconsin. On page 67, line 2, I move that the Senate reconsider that part of the amendment which resulted in striking out the words "or marriage." Then the objection will be obviated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the vote by which that part of the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to that part of the amendment. If there be no objection, that part of the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the organic act was approved for the district of Alaska, it was treated as all other communities where Indians resided, and a provision was incorporated in the act of a prohibitory nature, so far as concerns the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks. That law has continued in force until the present time. It is claimed in certain quarters, and I believe we have to concede the fact, that the liquor laws of Alaska, or the prohibitory laws, so called, have not been very strictly enforced, and that liquor has been sold in that district in violation of the provision of the organic act in that respect.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests to me that men have been killed in trying to enforce it. Men have been killed in New Hampshire in trying to enforce the laws against murder and arson and various other crimes, but we have not thought it necessary to repeal the laws because somebody was killed in trying to enforce them, and I do not think there is any argument in the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin. Undoubtedly there are obstacles in the way of enforcing the law in Alaska. I have taken occasion to investigate the matter somewhat, and I find that the uniform testimony, or almost the uniform testimony, is that no very great effort has been made to enforce the laws.

It may be that the officials are in sympathy with the traffic. It may be that some obstacles have been discovered which it is difficult to overcome. It may be that because somebody has been killed the other officers are afraid to perform their sworn duty. I do not know how this may be, but I have no doubt in my own mind that if an honest, determined effort were made to enforce those laws in Alaska they would be enforced.

I am quite unwilling to admit that this great Government of ours, which has enacted this statute for the district of Alaska, is so weak and so impotent that it can not enforce the laws of its own making. If I felt that such was the fact, I would feel ashamed of the great Government that we all believe is capable of enforcing its own laws, whether it is in the district of Alaska, in the District of Columbia, in the Indian Territory, or any other part of our country over which it has jurisdiction.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to indulge in any extended discussion of this question. I presume it is foreordained, if I may use the word, that we are to turn our backs on the policy which has heretofore existed and adopt a license system in Alaska, and it is to be argued that that is to be done, I take it, for two reasons: First, that we get revenue, and next, that the license law will be better enforced than the prohibitory laws.

Mr. President, I have been something of a student on this subject, and I have yet to discover that license laws anywhere are better enforced than prohibitory laws. I have yet to discover that licensed liquor does less harm than unlicensed or prohibited liquor. I venture the prediction that if the policy is changed, if we turn our backs on prohibition in the Territory of Alaska, which has been our uniform method of legislation regarding Territories where Indians constitute perhaps a majority of the population, there will be just as much violation of law, there will be just as much intemperance, there will be just as much disregard of the Federal authority, as there is to-day; and the only earthly advantage, if advantage it may be called, that we will derive from it will be some revenue from the sale of intoxicating drinks; in other words, that we will legalize an immoral traffic and claim that because we get some revenue out of it we are legislating wisely and well.

Now, Mr. President, I am against what I consider to be a retrograde movement in this regard. I am against admitting that the Federal arm is not strong enough to enforce the statute prohibiting the importation and sale of liquors in the Territory of Alaska; and at any rate, I am against admitting that until this code which we are about enacting has had a fair opportunity to be tried in that Territory.

Heretofore Alaska has been under a system of laws that, as I understand it, have been somewhat disjointed, and perhaps somewhat difficult of interpretation. Now, in the wisdom of Congress, we are about to enact a criminal code, and I appeal to the Senate that it will be the part of wisdom for Congress to insist that this code shall be tried without reversing our heretofore established principles of prohibition; and that if it proves in the course of time that this condition of things is continued it will be time for us to consider the advisability of making a change.

Mr. President, there is a very wide difference of opinion existing even in Alaska on this question. I myself chanced to be there three years ago, and I talked with a good many people on this subject. I talked with Mr. Duncan, that devoted man in New Metlakatla, who has a thousand Indians christianized and civilized, a beautiful little town where bonds have been issued and taken by the Indians for internal improvements. Mr. Duncan is very strongly against any change being made in this respect. There is a letter in the last report of the governor of Alaska from Mr. Duncan on that point, in which he very strongly insists that this proposed change should not be made. Others give testimony to the contrary, and it is a mooted question.

There are divided opinions. I am not prepared to say that those who advocate this change are not acting in quite as good faith as those who desire that the existing condition of things shall last; but I do say that in my judgment the statute or the provision of the organic act in this regard has never had a fair trial, and that there has never been an honest, earnest, determined effort made by the officers of the Government to enforce prohibition in the district of Alaska.

Mr. President, I close by repeating that as we are about to adopt a new code for that district, it seems to me we ought not to reverse this well-established principle of our Government, which has existed, I think, from its foundation, at least from the time when we first began to enact laws governing our Indian wards; but that we should, under this new code, give the question of prohibition a fair trial and not make undue haste, as I think we are making undue haste when we turn our backs upon the former and the well-established policy of our Government, and adopt a license law simply because we will get some revenue from that form of legislation.

Now, Mr. President, I have no disposition to delay the action upon this bill. I have been appealed to from various quarters to interpose objections to its enactment. I have not seen fit to do so. I simply am willing to rest this contention upon what I have so poorly said, and upon the proposition I shall make to strike out sections 460 to 480, inclusive, which are the provisions relating to the licensing of intoxicating liquors in the district of Alaska, and to move as a substitute the following, which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out sections 460 and 480, inclusive, and to insert in lieu the following:

That the provisions of chapter 3, Title XXIII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the unorganized Territory of Alaska, shall remain in full force except herein specially otherwise provided; and the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors in said district, except for medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes, is hereby prohibited under the penalties which are provided in section 1955 of the Revised Statutes for the wrongful importation of distilled spirits. And the President of the United States shall make such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, those of us who have believed that the provision presented by the committee as an amendment is the only way to control the liquor traffic in Alaska speak from our experience of doing business in that Territory for the past twenty years. We believe it should be done by a high license, by making everyone who pays a license for doing business in the Territory, so to speak, an officer of the law. For thirty years this Government has had control of the municipal affairs of the district of Alaska, and upon our statute books there is a law prohibiting the importation into that Territory of alcoholic and other intoxicating liquors. Yet, as a matter of fact, there is not a shipping point, a mining camp, or a town in that Territory where there are not saloons, low grogeries, gambling dens, and places where liquor is sold and the general public debauched. Even the law prohibiting the sale of liquor to Indians is violated.

Now, for one I do not propose to be placed in the position of opposing any measure that is calculated to be for the general interest of the public. I believe a high-license provision is the strongest law we can put upon our statute book in favor of good government, good morals, and good society.

The amendment proposed by the committee is simply a copy of the law that is to-day on the statute books of the District of Columbia, regulating the sale of liquor and other articles of merchandise. That is the general plan of the amendment. Every governor we have had in Alaska from the first to the present, every public official, has advocated and recommended in his report to the Government—all the special agents of the Government have recommended a high-license system.

They state that the only way this business can be controlled in that district is by recognizing a fact that exists—that liquor is there publicly sold; that the venders are indicted, and every petit jury that tries them disagrees or acquits them, because they say the General Government has given them a license for selling liquor. I find, by reference to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that there were issued in Alaska during the last year for the sale of spirituous liquor 403 licenses. The Government in one hand comes and says, "Here is a license for selling these liquors," and then it turns around and says to the officer of the law, "Prosecute that man for conducting a business that another officer of the same Government has authorized him to conduct."

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from California will permit me, is he not mistaken in saying that when the Government issues an internal-revenue license of this kind the Government gives any authority whatever to sell liquor? Must not that man take his chances, so far as State laws or the laws relating to this Territory are concerned?

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator is right so far as New Hampshire and other States are concerned. I see that the Government issued 1,535 licenses in New Hampshire last year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly; but it does not give any one of those men a right to sell liquor in contravention of the State law.

Mr. PERKINS. But we have no State law in Alaska. We have no other law except that which you make here and place upon the statute book.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. PERKINS. Therefore the juries and the courts have held by their verdict and otherwise that the sale of liquor there is no violation of any State law, because none exists.

I commend the efforts of the good people who want to bring about reform and prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, but they ought to commence right at home, here in the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia is not 10 miles square, and yet you are selling liquor here for which the liquor sellers pay a license fee which goes into the treasury of the District, and that money is appropriated for the support of this District. Here is an opportunity for my enthusiastic temperance prohibition friends. I am a temperance man myself. That is different from prohibition. If I could not get it, I do not know what the temptation might be; perhaps I should desire it; but that is the situation right here in this District, and I want my friends from New Hampshire and South Dakota, and my other friends to commence that work right here. The District is not 10 miles square.

When we have perfected this great reformation here in the capital city of the nation, I will go with them hand in hand to the district of Alaska, embracing 578,000 square miles, and we will do as Brother Duncan has done on the island of Metlakatla. There are some 20,000 islands in Alaska. He has done a splendid work there, but it is because he has the exclusive control of that little island. The most successful temperance colonies in this country, in my own State of California, are where the people in a district 1 mile or 5 miles square say we will submit the question to the people of that district, and if a majority determine that there shall be no saloons here we will have a temperance colony. So we have several of those colonies.

In our cities we control it by high license, and every man who pays his license becomes an officer of the law to see that others do not enjoy a privilege for nothing which he is paying for. So I believe that plan will work in Alaska. At all events I claim that those of us who have been in that district, and who have had business with it for these twenty-five years, know more about it than our friends living here, who have only a theoretical knowledge of it. I know they are acting in good faith. I know the charge which is made is not true so far as their being privy to this conspiracy, but I send to the desk and ask to have read an extract from one of the leading papers of Seattle in relation to the pending bill now before Congress, which provides for a high license.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before that communication is read I should like to ask the Senator from California just what advantage he supposes is to result from the enactment of this license law over the present law on this subject as applicable to that district? What advantage does he think is to be derived from it other than that the Government is going to receive money for authorizing the sale?

Mr. PERKINS. I believe that everyone who takes out a license will become, as it were, an officer of the law to see that the laws are executed and that no one is permitted to vend liquors without paying a license for the same. I believe it will result in respect for law. I believe a high license will be a bond for law and order.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from California a question? Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator think it tends to increase the respect for law to have all the barkeepers and people of that class enlisted in the cause?

Mr. PERKINS. That depends upon who the barkeeper is. I have seen barkeepers—

Mr. HOAR. I speak not of individual cases, but of my friend's general experience as to the character and standing of barkeepers.

Mr. PERKINS. From my observation in Alaska and statements of the condition which exists there are hundreds of people engaged in illicit traffic there, not only in selling liquor without a license, but in smuggling it into the Territory. There is a band of smugglers, commencing at the southeastern part of Alaska, at Fort Wrangell, and extending around the coast through its inlets and different towns up to Point Barrow, who are engaged in this illicit traffic.

It would take as large an army as we have to-day in Cuba to prevent them from smuggling liquor into that Territory. Mr. Hamlin, who comes from the same State that my friend who asks me the question does, when Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under President Cleveland, visited Juneau. He went there thinking he was to visit one of our largest towns—a temperance town. He went on shore and counted the saloons, and he counted 28 of them at that time. I am informed that there are to-day 57 there. He went to the subcollector of the port and said, "Mr. Collector, why is this permitted? Close up these saloons at once. They are run in violation of the laws of the United States." The subcollector said, "Mr. Secretary, detail every marine from your revenue cutter on shore, and I will endeavor to carry out your orders."

The Secretary viewed the situation, a high-minded, conscientious officer of the law as he was and is, and an honorable gentleman, and he said, "It is a physical impossibility to enforce the law." I have the testimony of the grand jury and of the United States district attorney, which I will later submit, but I want an article read to show how a certain element in Alaska is working with my friend from New Hampshire and his associates in trying to defeat this measure, which is drafted in the interest of temperance and good morals and good government.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the governor of that Territory is here. He is a man of high character. What does he say about this measure?

Mr. PERKINS. I want to bear my testimony as to the present governor of Alaska. He went there a missionary over twenty years ago. He is a teetotaler, a man who I do not believe ever drank a drop of anything stronger than Alaska coffee, and that is not very strong. He says all these years of observation and experience lead him to the conclusion that the only course we can now pursue to control the liquor traffic of Alaska is by a high license. That is the testimony of clergymen throughout that district, of the collectors of the ports, of the judges of the courts, of the United States marshal, and all others who have been students of this question; and no one for a moment can impugn the high, patriotic, or moral grounds that they take in relation to this question. I ask that the article be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAY in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FINDS STRANGE ALLIES—SKAGWAY'S DISORDERLY PEOPLE AID PROHIBITION PARTY—TO DEFEAT HIGH LICENSE—KEEPERS OF DANCE HALLS AND HOUSES OF ILL REPUTE SAID TO HAVE RAISED A PURSE TO HELP IN DEFEATING THE MEASURE—SATISFIED WITH PRESENT LIQUOR LAWS—WOULD BE FORCED OUT OF BUSINESS BY HEAVY TAX.

According to a report brought down from the north by W. H. Bush, purser on the steamer Al-Ki, the Prohibition party is being made a shield behind which its enemies are assisting to defeat the bill providing for a liquor license in Alaska. A purse amounting to several thousands is said to have been made up by the dance-hall element and keepers of houses of ill repute in Juneau, Skagway, Dyea, and Douglas City and forwarded to the agent for the Prohibition party at Washington, to be used by him in defeating the license measure. This money was not sent as coming from the people donating it, but as "sympathizers of the Prohibition party in Alaska."

The affair has just leaked out and is causing no little comment among the citizens of the towns in Alaska. Mr. Bush said yesterday that the story was given him by one of the oldest citizens of Juneau, a man who is an Alaskan pioneer and who is respected by all who know him, with the assurance that he would give it to the press. "I was in a hotel at Juneau when the gentleman in question told me the story," said Mr. Bush. "He said that the money had been contributed by those who were in favor of no license, because if there was one it would undoubtedly be a high license and their business would have to be closed, as they could not pay the license. The contribution has only been sent on to Washington during the past month. Coming as it is supposed to, the Prohibition party will use it all in good faith."

"It is a shame that a license can not be obtained for Alaska," said Purser Bush. "For many years the best citizens have been struggling to procure a license, but the Prohibition party, with the aid of Rev. Sheldon Jackson and his Presbyterian mission, has so far defeated the bill. A license has always been conceded the best thing for Alaska. Liquor can always be secured, and the way a good deal is being procured is by shipping it through in bond to the lakes. Then it is smuggled back into United States territory. The Prohibition party, in trying to do what it imagines is for the best, sometimes makes serious errors, and the attempt to defeat the license measure is one of them."

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that a newspaper article?

The SECRETARY. From the Post-Intelligencer, of Seattle, under date of January 23, 1899.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the Secretary to go back a little and read again the very serious accusation that money has been sent to Washington to control this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

According to a report brought down from the north by W. H. Bush, purser on the steamer Al-Ki, the Prohibition party is being made a shield behind which its enemies are assisting to defeat the bill providing for a liquor license in Alaska. This money was not sent as coming from the people donating it, but as "sympathizers of the Prohibition party in Alaska."

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator from California, who has sent up this newspaper article which says it is reported that a certain thing has been done, whether he believes it or not?

Mr. PERKINS. If my friend will accept my belief on the other proposition, that high license is for the benefit of Alaska, good government, and good morals, I will say that this is a part of the truth painted in Titian colors. No; I do not believe all the newspapers say. They look at the truth sometimes at very acute angles. That is a rumor, and I give it for what it is worth. It is published in one of the leading papers of Washington.

But I want to give the testimony of the grand jury of the district of Alaska. I want to give the testimony of the United States district attorney for Alaska, who has written me upon the subject-matter. I will read an extract from the report of the grand jury of Alaska which convened in November, 1898—four months ago. I will read only the concluding paragraphs:

The history of the present prohibitive liquor laws in Alaska has proven it to be a farce and tends only to the encouragement of smuggling.

In our opinion a high-license law, with proper restrictions, is the most practical solution of the question. The need of such legislation is very urgent, and we recommend that the matter be brought to the attention of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

J. H. McWATTERS, Foreman.

J. J. C. BARBER, Clerk.

The report of the Committee on Territories has the testimony of the present governor of Alaska; it has the testimony of other officials in that Territory, and it seems to me it has been uncontroverted. It is impossible for anyone who has a knowledge of that Territory, of its geographical situation, of the class of population there, knowing that for thirty years this Government has been unsuccessful in prohibiting the importation of liquor into that Territory, to deny that it is our duty to try for a time at least, two years or one year, another plan.

I will ask the Secretary to read an extract from a letter from the present United States district attorney of Alaska, and I will submit the case, as we have a special order at 1 o'clock; but the official records in all the reports from Alaska bear out and are corroborative of the statement submitted by the United States district attorney.

The Secretary read as follows:

Extract from letter of United States Attorney R. A. Friedrich, Sitka, Alaska, under date of January 24, 1899:

"I see by the newspapers that Alaska is receiving considerable attention at the hands of Congress, but I am afraid the liquor or license law as I see it reported will not help us very much if the sale of liquor under license in the Territory be limited to sales of not less than 5 gallons; the old trouble will still prevail. The only evil it will remedy will be to do away with smuggling. Those who obtain a license and sell in quantities of not less than 5 gallons will simply become the wholesale dealers, and the dive keepers and irresponsible dealers in liquor will simply have an easier and more ready base of supplies.

"I succeeded in getting 238 indictments against men engaged in the liquor business in the district at the term of the court just closed. There was a disposition on the part of the grand jury at the beginning to ignore the law, but I represented to them that, in my best judgment, we would have relief at this session of Congress, and that it would ill become the residents of the Territory, at the time when they are demanding and appealing for so much legislation, to put themselves in the attitude of treating with contempt and refusing to obey the laws they now have. This argument had its effect, and I succeeded in procuring indictments against every man in the Territory whose name and location was possible to learn.

"I very much fear that this is the last term of court in the Territory, if no relief is had, that the grand jury can be prevailed upon to indict under the present status of affairs; and if they should indict, petit juries will refuse to convict. Should these men demand trials, under our present system they can absolutely clog and obstruct the courts and render it impossible to transact civil business or any other than the trial of whisky cases, or, on the other hand, to try the civil and important criminal cases would take up the entire time of the court and exhaust the appropriation, and the whisky men would go unwhipped of justice, so you see the situation may be an awkward one, and it puts us almost at the mercy of these men."

MR. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, the strongest argument that has heretofore been made by the advocates of high license in the district of Alaska has been that there were no means of communication between the various communities and inhabited districts in that Territory. It has been claimed that heretofore the officers of the law have been unable to reach the communities where liquor is sold unlawfully in the district of Alaska, but that argument can not be used any longer for the reason that at the present time the means of communication in Alaska are very much improved. Railroads are being built in all the important parts of Alaska; the navigable rivers are open during the season, and are thickly dotted with steamers during the entire summer. People are pouring into Alaska by thousands; it is no longer a wilderness, but it has come within the pale of civilization, and I believe that we ought to apply to it civilized methods.

Mr. President, there is no sentiment among the people of the district of Alaska in favor of high license. The demand for high license in that country comes largely from the wholesale liquor dealers of the Pacific coast. I know whereof I speak. It is the purpose of those dealers to send liquors into that country which no living being can take into his stomach without serious danger to health and life. We all know the class of liquors that are sent to the mining camps. I believe it is the duty of the American Congress to protect the people who go to that country, who are obliged to engage in desperate callings and desperate occupations, and not to place in their hands such a temptation as will be placed there by the men who propose to flood that country with cheap and poisonous liquors.

Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] tells us that if we do not have high license in Alaska the Indians of the various islands there will be permitted to have all the liquor they want through a system of smuggling which he claims prevails in that country. What the Senator from California proposes is that we shall establish a system whereby the people of those various islands shall have all the liquor they want without any restraint whatever. That is the effect of the legislation which the Senator from California and the Senator from Montana advocate here.

Now, as to another point in relation to this subject. The Senator from California has several times referred to the fact that the place to begin with these reforms is here in the District of Columbia. The conditions in the District of Columbia are altogether different from those existing in the district of Alaska. Here in the District of Columbia we have an entirely different class of people to deal with. We have here the foreign embassies, the foreign legations, and a very large class of people who could not exist, or think they could not exist, without having their liquors at their tables—their wines and their beer—and it is proposed to-day, before we shall undertake to legislate in behalf of the people in Alaska, that we shall pass a prohibition law in the District of Columbia. There is no relevancy whatever in the comparison made by the Senator from California.

Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate, because I understand there is a special order at 1 o'clock, and I am willing that a vote shall now be taken upon the question.

MR. CARTER. At the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, I move to amend, on page 55, line 1 of section 139, by inserting, after the word "person," the words "other than an officer on lawful business."

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. CARTER. Now, Mr. President—

MR. VEST. Will the Senator permit me for just a moment?

MR. CARTER. I yield with pleasure to the Senator.

MR. VEST. Mr. President, I have nothing so important to say that I desire to delay the action of the Senate upon the bill, but it is very evident that we shall not vote upon it before 1 o'clock.

I desire to say simply, from personal observation, that I think the present condition in regard to the selling of liquor in Alaska is not only a broad farce, but absolutely detrimental to the people in that district, not to call it a Territory.

I regard intemperance as the greatest evil that ever afflicted the human race. I think it is the fabled Pandora's box, out of which comes all the crime known to civilization or barbarism. But we are compelled to take human nature as we find it. There never has been a people discovered, no matter what their condition, who did not have a stimulant, unless it be the American Indians, who had tobacco; and when whisky was introduced amongst them they made up for lost time [laughter], until two-thirds of the Indians upon the continent were destroyed.

If I had the power, by any sort of legislation known to the ingenuity of mortal man, to destroy the last drop of alcoholic stimulant upon the face of the earth, I would do it with the greatest pleasure and alacrity. But it can not be done, and the experience of the whole human race shows it. The only result of absolute prohibition to the appetites of men as they are is to deteriorate the stimulant that is used. If any man wants to see this illustrated, let him go to Alaska. They have there a drink called "Russian brandy," in which there are fifty murders to every pint. [Laughter.] It is absolute lunacy to use it, and yet it is used, and it is impossible, from the geographical condition of the country, to keep out liquor, with all the vile compounds that are known to the avarice and greed of smugglers.

Mr. President, one of the officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey told me recently that he loaned to the authorities of Alaska a Government vessel and that it was seized for smuggling—one of our own vessels—and that they found in the hold a large quantity of the vilest liquors possible, which the subordinate officers of the vessel were smuggling and peddling out on account of the immense price they were enabled to receive for it.

The temptation to violate the law and the facility with which it is done are such in Alaska that the present system of absolute prohibition amounts to nothing except as an inducement to crime.

Now, if you have high license, you create a detective force from interest that will not only lessen the amount of liquor that is used, but bring a better quality into general use.

You can not eradicate the appetite, especially in a climate like Alaska. The man who goes to Alaska, under perpetual fog and without seeing the sun more than once in six weeks, who is a strict teetotaler, is a marvel and very rarely to be found. The climate is such as to induce an appetite for stimulants. Then when you add to this the temptation of greed and the enormous prices that can be had for these vile compounds, you make an irresistible case against absolute prohibition.

The Senator from New Hampshire, with whom I sympathize entirely in his desire to eradicate intemperance, speaks of Mr. Duncan, who is at the head of a colony of the Metlakatla. Mr. President, Metlakatla is sui generis; it is different from any other community in the United States.

MR. GALLINGER. I dislike extremely to interrupt the Senator, but I will suggest that the time has arrived for the special order to be executed. I think, however, an arrangement may be made whereby the Senator can proceed.

MR. VEST. I am ready to stop.

MR. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that such time as may be taken by the Senator from Missouri and by the Senator in the final disposition of the pending bill, continuing henceforth, may be added to the time of the special order accorded to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

MR. GALLINGER. That will be agreeable to me.

MR. PASCO. If that meets with the approval of the Committee on Appropriations, I have no objection.

MR. CARTER. I ask that the Senator from New Hampshire, upon the conclusion of this bill, may have the three-quarters of an hour which has been agreed to for the consideration of the bills embraced in that agreement.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

MR. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator from Montana for his suggestion to give me time, but I shall not consume it. I have very little more to say in regard to this question.

I was speaking in regard to the peculiar colony of Metlakatla, at the head of which is Mr. Duncan, a very remarkable man, and one to whom there can not be given enough credit, in my opinion, for the self-sacrifice he has exhibited in that wild country in humanizing and christianizing a people once cannibals.

I think Mr. Duncan is entirely right when he favors absolute prohibition as to the Indians under his charge. There are but a limited number of them and they are absolutely controlled by him. They were driven out of the British possessions by the action of the ecclesiastical authorities in Vancouver and in England, and they took refuge within the territory of the United States. They look to Mr. Duncan as the absolute authority to control them. It is not the Government of the United States nor the laws of the United States that restrain them. It is their personal affection for Mr. Duncan, whom they have followed, giving up their homes in British America in order to come with him to the domain of the United States. He can control them.

That reservation is not like any other Indian reservation, where the nonintercourse laws with police are to be enforced. When one of the Metlakahla Indians is in doubt about any question he goes to Mr. Duncan to have it solved. The Indian who has followed a white man away from his domicile into a foreign land, who has given up everything except his personal veneration for that man, it is easily seen can be controlled by personal influence and personal affection.

But, Mr. President, if that were a reservation like an ordinary Indian reservation, the case would be entirely different. When you come to a Territory or a district, like Alaska, where whites and Indians are intermingled, and all the different nationalities of the zones outside, yes, and inside, the temperate zone, it can easily be seen that absolute prohibition, with as extensive a coast as that of Alaska, is absolutely impossible.

High license and local option, I honestly believe—and I am as thoroughly opposed to intemperance as any man living—constitute the only remedy as to this infernal appetite for drink, which exists amongst all the people of the world. Unless you have public sentiment and public opinion to maintain your laws in favor of temperance, the evil is but aggravated, and intensely aggravated.

There is a disposition on the part of thousands of our race to violate a law if it assumes anything like the character of coercion. A great American lecturer has declared graphically that if the Mississippi River ran whisky, if every stone on its banks was a lump of sugar, and every shrub was mint, and everybody could go there and drink without let or hindrance, fewer people would drink than if you put up a fence with placards upon it declaring that no man should touch the liquid in that river. [Laughter.] From the time that the boy will climb a fence to take an apple in a forbidden orchard up to the time that he dies an old and gray-haired man, there is a disposition to resist anything like restraint upon personal appetite and personal liberty.

Prohibition has been a failure wherever it has been attempted. You take the reports of the Internal Revenue Department of the United States, and what will you find? You find more United States licenses to sell liquor, to sell alcoholic stimulants, in the prohibition States than in those where there is high license and local option.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I will say that that is not true with respect to the State I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. VEST. I have not looked recently, but I did some years ago when we had a debate on this question in the Senate, and I found it then to be the case.

Mr. CARTER. Supplemental to what the Senator from Missouri says, if he will permit an interruption—

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I have here a statement from the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the years 1896, 1897, and 1898, wherefrom it appears that in 1896 taxes were collected from 112 retail dealers in Alaska; in 1897, from 147 retail dealers, and in 1898 from 373 retail dealers in liquor in the Territory or district of Alaska.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is no answer to this statement that the United States licenses do not give the right to sell alcoholic stimulants within a State or Territory where the local laws are against it. Let me ask the question, Why are these United States licenses taken out at all in prohibition States? Do men go and pay their money to an internal-revenue collector for amusement?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In my State they are taken out largely by people who are engaged in keeping what are known as billiard halls or pool tables, and who sell what are known as "soft drinks."

Mr. VEST. Yes; and they are taken out by drug stores.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And taken out by drug stores.

Mr. VEST. Exactly; because the pool sellers or pool-room proprietors—

Mr. HANSBROUGH. But they take out no State license, though they sell liquor.

Mr. VEST. Exactly, and the Senator is reenforcing my argument. They have no State license, and they are willing to run the chance of beating the State law, but they are afraid of the United States. The drug-store keeper buys a few bottles of miserable decoctions for medicine, which would take the hair off the oldest dog in the township [laughter], and he then, without any State license—which he can not obtain on account of prohibition—takes out a United States license, puts it up conspicuously in his drug store, and he peddles out crime and disease, the State law being inoperative, because he is enabled by personal and local influence to evade it, but he is afraid to come in contact with the United States authorities and therefore he pays the United States license.

I repeat, does he pay this license for amusement? What is his object in taking it out? What is the meaning of the word "license?" It is a permit. And he buys a license from the United States because he is afraid of the Federal courts. The fact remains glaringly distinct that he is pandering to the appetite for alcoholic viands, and he is evading, or rather he is treating contemptuously and with the utmost disrespect, the laws of the Commonwealth in which he lives, and evading at the same time the punishment that would come upon him under the United States statute.

Mr. President, I am not arguing for intemperance, but in favor of temperance, because I believe the worst legislation that can be had is that which challenges the appetites that are universal in the human race and that undertakes not to restrain, but to eradicate them absolutely. It can not be done. Take any of the passions or appetites which God mysteriously has implanted in us and undertake to stamp them out and you but increase their violence. Therefore, the wise legislator seeks to restrain, to modify, to do away with the worst effects, and, without encouraging, to diminish by putting such safeguards around it as human nature itself will permit.

It passes all understanding with me how any man has ever gone to Alaska and come to the conclusion that prohibition is possible in that district. What has been the experience in regard to opium? I saw when on my visit to Alaska hundreds of small craft out upon the waters a mile or a mile and a half from land, which I supposed to be engaged in fishing. When I made inquiry of experienced denizens domiciled at that place, I found they were what were called opium boats, plying their nefarious trade at night, bringing in opium and selling it at enormous prices, and then in the day time lazily floating upon the water in the guise of fishing craft engaged in a lawful and innocent business.

I am in favor of this amendment. Anything is better than the present system. Give a trial to the new one. Let us endeavor by some sort of sensible legislation to do away with that enormous evil which afflicts Alaska as it afflicts every other community in the country.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I am not going at this late hour in the session to enter into any extensive discussion of this amendment, but I want to say before the vote is taken, although I may be somewhat old-fashioned in my notions, I do not believe that the United States ought to enter into the business of licensing for a compensation, a fee, the business of selling liquor in Alaska or anywhere else where it has complete and entire jurisdiction. I asked the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] what he expected to get by a license law of this character other than the fact that the Government would receive considerable money from it, but I listened in vain for an answer.

I have listened to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and I learn from him that the liquor which is sold in Alaska contrary to the United States law is very poor and calculated to do a great deal more harm than what might be called pure liquor; but I do not believe that there will be any less liquor sold in Alaska under the license law or that the quality of the liquor will be improved. The sale will go on as it does now. The man who has a wholesale place will have to pay the Government $2,000 a year, and the man who has a retail place will have to pay the Government from $500 to $1,000 a year.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the Senator if he does not believe that it will stop smuggling both by the vessels that are now plying between Seattle and Puget Sound and also from over in the British territory, which is divided by an imaginary line only?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There may be a sentimental benefit in the stopping of the smuggling of liquor, but I do not think that the Government can afford to go into partnership with the liquor dealer and make him, according to the idea of the Senator from California, an officer of the United States just for the purpose of stopping smuggling. I think the Government could stop the smuggling somewhat, perhaps not entirely, if it were more vigilant than it is now.

I did not rise to discuss this matter, but because I am going to vote against the amendment of the committee I simply desire to say that I do not believe any good is to come from it. I do not believe the sale of liquor is to be prevented there. I do not believe the quality of the liquor is to be improved. I believe the Government is going to make money out of it.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to what I think is a clerical error. On page 232, line 11, after the word "male," there should be inserted the words "and female."

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. MALLORY. The word "citizens" should be changed to "residents." We have used the word "residents" in a former part of the section.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the Senator from Florida. I believe the amendment will be in order upon the disposition of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the amendment suggested is now in order, because it is a part of the matter proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CARTER. I accept the amendment. After the word "male" in line 11, section 1, page 232, I move to insert the words "and female" and strike out "citizens" in the same line and insert "residents."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out of the bill sections 460 to 480, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the provisions of Chapter 3, Title XXIII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the unorganized Territory of Alaska, shall remain in full force, except as herein specially otherwise provided; and the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors in said district, except for medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes, is hereby prohibited, under the penalties which are provided in section 1955 of the Revised Statutes for the wrongful importation of distilled spirits. And the President of the United States shall make such regulations as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. He not being here, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when Mr. MORGAN's name was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SEWELL. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 49; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Allen, Frye, Gallinger,	Hansbrough, Hoar, Lodge,	McLaurin, Platt, Conn. Proctor,	Roach, Ross.
-------------------------------	--------------------------------	---------------------------------------	-----------------

NAYS—49.

Bate, Berry, Caffery, Carter, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Cockrell, Cullom, Daniel, Deboe, Fairbanks, Faulkner,	Foraker, Gray, Hanna, Harris, Hawley, Hittfield, Jones, Nev. Kenney, Lindsay, McBride, McEnery, McMillan, Mallory,	Mantle, Martin, Mills, Money, Murphy, Nelson, Penrose, Perkins, Pettus, Platt, N. Y. Rawlins, Shoup, Simon,	Spooner, Stewart, Sullivan, Thurston, Tillman, Turley, Turner, Vest, Wellington, White.
--	--	---	--

NOT VOTING—30.

Aldrich, Allison, Bacon, Baker, Burrows, Butler, Cannon, Chilton,	Davis, Elkins, Gear, Gorman, Hale, Jones, Ark. Kyle, Mason,	Mitchell, Morgan, Pasco, Pettigrew, Pritchard, Quay, Sewell, Smith,	Teller, Turpie, Warren, Westmore, Wilson, Wolcott.
--	--	--	---

So Mr. GALLINGER's amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Four committee amendments are before the Senate—sections 460 to 480. Is there objection to agreeing to the amendments? The Chair hears none; and the amendments are agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SHOUP, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. MALLORY were appointed.

PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. In connection with the special order, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pasco] that the bills be alternated, first taking up a pension bill and then a bill to correct a military record, and that we proceed in that way until the close, if the bills are of equal number.

Mr. PASCO. That is entirely satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order pursued.

ELIZABETH V. LITZENBERG.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives reconsidering its action on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4833) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth V. Litzenberg and returning the bill to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the votes whereby the bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and passed be reconsidered, with the view to further amending it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, I move to strike out "Henry" and substitute the word "Hervey;" and in line 7, strike out "eighth" and insert "second."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD C. PARSONS.

Mr. PASCO. Order of Business 1512.

The bill (H. R. 2646) for the relief of Edward C. Parsons was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

BENJAMIN F. BOURNE.

The bill (S. 4876) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Bourne was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Benjamin F. Bourne, late of Company F, Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HAZELBECK.

Mr. PASCO. Order of Business 1604.

The bill (H. R. 8854) to correct the military record of William Hazelbeck, of Portsmouth, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendment, in line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out "remove from" and insert "correct;" and in line 6, after the word "Cavalry," to strike out "any charge of desertion that may exist against him, and to grant him an honorable discharge" and insert:

W. B. ALLISON,
S. M. CULLOM,
F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM W. GROUT,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report just presented to the Senate and read.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not a final report on the bill. There are still in disagreement the provision inserted by the Senate relating to electric lighting, the provision inserted in the Senate for additional police, and also the entire question of charities in the District of Columbia, the Senate having made material amendments in nearly every item in the House bill as respects charities. The conferees on the part of the House of Representatives make some suggestions respecting electric lighting which may possibly result in an agreement upon that question. They are very firm in resisting any increase relating to the police, and also adhere to their position respecting charities.

I move that the Senate still further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives upon those amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pension and military-record bills will be proceeded with, under the order of the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. I desire in the meantime, Mr. President, to make a privileged conference report on the census bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] accept the suggestion of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] that the fortifications bill may be placed before the Senate, and then that the request of the Senator from Tennessee be put?

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, I believe I shall prefer, if it be in order, to make the bill to which I have referred the order of business after the fortifications appropriation bill shall have been concluded, if I can secure an arrangement to that effect.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the Senator for the consideration of his bill before the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill is proceeded with. I only wanted that bill to have what it is entitled to have—the right of way.

Mr. CAFFERY. Do I understand there is unanimous consent asked to take up the eight-hour bill and to pass it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CAFFERY. By unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request for unanimous consent has not been put to the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee made the request for the consideration of the bill, and the Senator from California addressed the Chair and asked that the fortifications appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CAFFERY. There has been no unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No unanimous consent has been given.

Mr. TURLEY. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] yields to me to allow the bill I have in charge to be taken up.

Mr. PERKINS. With the understanding that it will not bring on a long discussion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from California can not make any such agreement for the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly not.

Mr. TURLEY. Then I will make a motion to take up the bill, and I will ask that it be put to a vote of the Senate. The eight-hour bill is very important, and if we are going to do anything about it at all it ought to be settled now. I want the Senate to settle the question. It is a bill in which many of our citizens are deeply interested, and, if it be in order, I now move to take up the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee abandons his request for unanimous consent, and moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of, or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAFFERY. Is unanimous consent asked?

Mr. TURLEY. No; I have moved to take up the bill.

Mr. CARTER. The condition of business is such that I feel constrained to request that the privileged report which I have forwarded to the Secretary's desk be now considered, pending the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY].

Mr. TURLEY. If my motion is in order, I ask to have it put to the Senate at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The privileged report of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] may be laid before the Senate, and it will then be a question for the Senate to determine whether or not it will proceed to its consideration. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

Mr. TURLEY. I ask for a vote on my motion, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Deboe,	Mantle,	Platt, N. Y.
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	Martin,	Hawkins,
Bate,	Foraker,	Mills,	Roach,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Mitchell,	Ross,
Butler,	Gear,	Money,	Sewell,
Caffery,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Shoup,
Carter,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Heitfeld,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Tillman,
Clark,	Lindsay,	Penrose,	Turley,
Clay,	McBride,	Perkins,	Vest,
Cockrell,	McEnery,	Pettus,	Wellington,
Cullom,	Mallory,	Platt, Conn.	White.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TURLEY. I believe I have the floor on my motion to take up the eight-hour bill. I shall, however, let the conference report be presented, and then I shall ask to have my motion submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order of proceeding, unless some privileged question intervenes. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11815) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That a census of the population, of deaths, and of the manufacturing, mechanical, and agricultural products of the United States shall be taken in the year 1900, and once every ten years thereafter.

"SEC. 2. That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a Census Office, the chief officer of which shall be denominated the Director of the Census. It shall be his duty to superintend and direct the taking of the Twelfth Census of the United States, in accordance with the laws relating thereto, and to perform such other duties as may be required of him by law. The Director of the Census shall be appointed, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive an annual salary of $6,000; and there shall also be an Assistant Director of the Census, to be appointed in like manner, who shall be an experienced practical statistician, and shall receive an annual salary of $4,000: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census.

"SEC. 3. That during the absence of the Director of the Census, or when the office of Director shall become vacant, the Assistant Director shall perform the duties of the Director.

"SEC. 4. That there shall also be in the Census Office, to be appointed by the Director thereof in the manner hereinafter specified, five chief statisticians, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, at an annual salary of $3,000 each; a chief clerk, one disbursing clerk, and one geographer, at an annual salary of $2,500 each; five expert chiefs of division and two stenographers, at an annual salary of $2,000 each; ten clerks of class 4, fifteen clerks of class 3, twenty clerks of class 2, and such number of clerks of class 1, and of clerks, copyists, computers, and skilled laborers, with salaries at the rate of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000 per annum, to be appointed from time to time, as may be found necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties herein required to be undertaken. The disbursing clerk herein provided for shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the Secretary of the Treasury in the sum of $50,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, quarter-yearly, of all moneys and properties which shall be received by him by virtue of his office, with sureties to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

"The Director of the Census may also appoint 1 captain of the watch, at a salary of $640 per annum; 2 messengers, and such number of watchmen, assistant messengers, and laborers, at salaries of $600 each per annum; messenger boys, at salaries of $400 each per annum; and charwomen, at salaries of $240 each per annum, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. That the chief clerk and the chief statisticians provided for in section 4 of this act, and all other employees authorized by this act below the Assistant Director of the Census, shall be appointed by the Director of the Census, subject to such examination as said Director may prescribe: Provided, That no examination shall be required in the case of enumerators or special agents, nor of employees below the grade of skilled laborers at $600 per annum: And provided further, That employees in the existing branches of the departmental service, whose services may be specially desired by the Director of the Census, not exceeding 6 in all, may be transferred without examination, and at the end of such service the employees so transferred shall be eligible to appointment in any Department without additional examination, when vacancies exist.

"SEC. 6. That the collection of the information required by this act shall be made, under the direction of the Director of the Census, by supervisors, enumerators, and special agents, as hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 7. That the Twelfth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to the population, to mortality, to the products of agriculture, and of manufacturing and mechanical establishments. The schedules relating to the population shall comprehend for each inhabitant the name, age, color, sex, conjugal condition, place of birth, and place of birth of parents, whether alien or naturalized, number of years in the United States, occupation, months unemployed, literacy, school attendance, and ownership of farms and homes; and the Director of the Census may use his discretion as to the construction and form and number of inquiries necessary to secure information under the topics aforesaid. The mortality schedules shall comprehend for each decedent the name, sex, color, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, and birthplace of parents, occupation, cause and date of death, and, if born within the census year, the date of birth. The form and arrangement of the schedule and the specific questions necessary to secure the information required shall be in the discretion of the Director. The schedules relating to agriculture shall comprehend the following topics: Name of occupant of each farm, color of occupant, tenure, acreage, value of farm and improvements, acreage of different products, quantity and value of products, and number and value of live stock.

"All questions as to quantity and value of crops shall relate to the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration. The specific form and division of inquiries necessary to secure information under the foregoing topics shall be in the discretion of the Director of the Census. The schedules of inquiries relating to the products of manufacturing and mechanical establishments shall embrace the name and location of each establishment; character of organization, whether individual, cooperative, or other form; date of commencement of operations; character of business or kind of goods manufactured; amount of capital invested; number of proprietors, firm members, copartners, or officers, and the amount of their salaries; number of employees, and the amount of their wages; quantity and cost of materials used in manufacture; amount of miscellaneous expenses; quantity and value of products; time in operation during the census year; character and quantity of power used, and character and number of machines employed. The form and subdivision of inquiries necessary to secure the information under the foregoing topics relating to manufacturing and mechanical industries shall be in the discretion of the Director of the Census. The information collected shall be of and for the fiscal year of such corporations or establishments having its termination nearest to and preceding the 1st of June, 1900.

"Whenever he shall deem it expedient, the Director of the Census may withhold the schedules for said manufacturing and mechanical statistics from the enumerators of the several subdivisions in any or all cases, and may charge the collection of these statistics upon special agents, to be employed without respect to locality. In cities or States where an official registration of deaths is maintained the Director of the Census may, in his discretion, withhold the mortality schedule from the several enumerators within such cities or States, and may obtain the information required by this act through official records, paying therefor such sum of money as may be found necessary, not exceeding 2 cents for each death thus returned. The Director of the Census is also authorized and directed to make suitable provisions for the enumeration of the population and products of Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands, for which purpose he may employ supervisors and enumerators or special agents, as he may deem necessary.

"The only volumes that shall be prepared and published in connection with the Twelfth Census, except the special reports hereinafter provided for, shall relate to population, mortality and vital statistics, the products of agriculture, and of manufacturing and mechanical establishments, as above mentioned, and shall be designated as and constitute the census reports, which said reports shall be published not later than the 1st day of July, 1902. The report upon population shall include a series of separate tables for each State, giving by counties the number of male persons below and above the age of 21 years, their color, whether native or foreign born, whether naturalized or not, and their literacy or illiteracy. All terms expressing weight, measure, distance, or value shall be expressed in the terms of the English language as spoken in this country.

"SEC. 8. That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to special classes, including the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind; to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to deaths and births in registration areas; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone and telegraph business; to transportation by water, express business, and street railways; to mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold, in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry: Provided, That the reports herein authorized relating to mines, mining, and minerals shall be published on or before July 1, A. D. 1903.

"And the Director of the Census shall prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall in his judgment be best adapted to elicit the information required under these subjects, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end. For the purpose of securing the statistics required by this section, the Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided. The statistics of deaths and births provided for in this section shall be obtained from, and restricted to, the registration records of such States and municipalities as possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, in the discretion of the Director, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 2 cents for each birth or death reported. The statistics of special classes, and of crime, pauperism, and benevolence specified in this section shall be restricted to institutions containing such classes: Provided, That at the time of the census enumeration the data relating to these classes may, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, be collected by the enumerators of such institutions, who shall receive compensation therefor at rates not exceeding, in per capita districts, 5 cents for each name enumerated and returned. The collection of statistics authorized by this section shall be made at such time or times and in such manner as will not interfere with nor delay the rapid completion of the census reports provided for in section 7 of this act, and all reports prepared under the provisions of this section shall be designated as 'Special Reports of the Census Office.'

"SEC. 9. That the Director of the Census shall, at least six months prior to the date fixed for commencing the enumeration at the Twelfth and each succeeding decennial census, designate the number, whether one or more, of supervisors of census to be appointed within each State and Territory, the District of Columbia, Alaska, and the Hawaiian Islands, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the whole number of such supervisors shall not exceed 300: And provided further, That wherever practicable and desirable the boundaries of the supervisor's districts shall conform to the boundaries of Congressional districts.

"SEC. 10. That each supervisor of census shall be charged with the performance within his own district of the following duties: To consult with the Director of the Census in regard to the division of his district into subdivisions most convenient for the purpose of the enumeration, which subdivisions shall be declared and the boundaries thereof fixed by the Director of the Census; to designate to the Director suitable persons, and, with the consent of the Director, to employ such persons as enumerators within his district, one or more for each subdivision and resident therein; but in case it shall occur in any enumeration district that no person qualified to perform and willing to undertake the duties of enumerator resides in that subdivision the supervisor may employ any fit person to be the enumerator of that subdivision; to communicate to enumerators the necessary instructions and directions relating to their duties; to examine and scrutinize the returns of the enumerators, and in event of discrepancies or deficiencies appearing in the returns for his district, to use all diligence in causing the same to be corrected and supplied; to forward to the Director of the Census the completed returns for his district in such time and manner as shall be prescribed by the said Director, and to make up and forward to the Director the accounts required for ascertaining the amount of compensation due to each enumerator in his district, which accounts shall be duly sworn to by the enumerator, and the same shall be certified as true and correct, if so found, by the supervisor, and said accounts so sworn to and certified shall be accepted by the said Director, and payment shall be made thereon by draft in favor of each enumerator.

"The duties imposed upon the supervisor by this act shall be performed, in any and all particulars, in accordance with the instructions and directions of the Director of the Census: Provided, That if the supervisor of any district has not been appointed and qualified on the ninetieth day preceding the date fixed for the commencement of the enumeration, the Director of the Census may appoint a special agent, who shall be a resident of the same district, to perform the work of subdivision into enumeration districts: And provided, That any supervisor who may abandon, neglect, or improperly perform the duties required of him by this act may be removed by the Director of the Census, and any vacancy thus caused or otherwise occurring during the process of the enumeration may be filled by the Director of the Census.

"SEC. 11. That each supervisor of census shall, upon the completion of his duties to the satisfaction of the Director of the Census, receive the sum of $125, and in addition thereto, in thickly settled districts, $1 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated in such district, and in sparsely settled districts $1.40 for each thousand or majority fraction of a thousand of the population enumerated in such district; such sums to be in full compensation for all services rendered and expenses incurred by him, except that in serious emergencies arising during the progress of the enumeration in his district, or in connection with the reenumeration of any subdivision, he may, in the discretion of the Director of the Census, be allowed actual and necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during his necessary absence from his usual place of residence, and that an appropriate allowance for clerk hire may be made when deemed necessary by the Director of the Census: Provided, That in the aggregate no supervisor shall be paid less than the sum of $1,000. The designation of the compensation per thousand, as provided in this section, shall be made by the Director of the Census at least one month in advance of the date fixed for the commencement of the enumeration.

"SEC. 12. That each enumerator shall be charged with the collection, in his subdivision, of facts and statistics required by the population schedule, and such other schedules as the Director of the Census may determine shall be used by him in connection with the census, as provided in section 7 of this act. It shall be the duty of each enumerator to visit personally each dwelling house in his subdivision, and each family therein, and each individual living out of a family in any place of abode, and by inquiry made of the head of each family, or of the member thereof deemed most credible and worthy of trust, or of such individual living out of a family, to obtain each and every item of information and all particulars required by this act as of date June 1 of the year in which the enumeration shall be made. And in case no person shall be found at the usual place of abode of such family, or individual living out of a family, competent to answer the inquiries made in compliance with the requirements of this act, then it shall be lawful for the enumerator to obtain the required information, as nearly as may be practicable, from the family or families or person or persons living nearest to such place of abode; and it shall be the duty of each enumerator to forward the original schedules, duly certified, to the supervisor of census of his district as his returns under the provisions of this act; and in the event of discrepancies or deficiencies being discovered in his said returns he shall use all diligence in correcting or supplying the same.

"In case the subdivision assigned to any enumerator embraces all or any part of any incorporated borough, village, town, or city, and also other territory not included within the limits of such incorporated borough, village, town, or city, or either, it shall be the duty of the enumerator of such subdivision to clearly and plainly distinguish and separate, upon the population schedules, the inhabitants of all or any part of such borough, village, town, or city as may be embraced in the subdivision assigned to such enumerator from the inhabitants of the territory not included therein. No enumerator shall be deemed qualified to enter upon his duties until he has received from the supervisor of census of the district to which he belongs a commission, under his hand, authorizing him to perform the duties of an enumerator, and setting forth the boundaries of the subdivision within which such duties are to be performed by him.

"SEC. 13. That the subdivision assigned to any enumerator shall not exceed 4,000 inhabitants, as near as may be, according to estimates based on the preceding census or other reliable information, and the boundaries of all subdivisions shall be clearly described by civil divisions, rivers, roads, public surveys, or other easily distinguished lines: Provided, That enumerators may be assigned for the special enumeration of institutions, when desirable, without reference to the number of inmates.

"SEC. 14. That any supervisor of census may, with the approval of the Director of the Census, remove any enumerator from his district and fill the vacancy thus caused or otherwise occurring. Whenever it shall appear that any portion of the enumeration and census provided for in this act has been negligently or improperly taken, and is by reason thereof incomplete or erroneous, the Director of the Census may cause such incomplete and unsatisfactory enumeration and census to be amended and made anew under such methods as may, in his discretion, be practicable.

"SEC. 15. That the Director of the Census may authorize and direct supervisors of census to employ interpreters to assist the enumerators of their respective districts in the enumeration of persons not speaking the English language. The compensation of such interpreters shall be fixed by the Director of the Census in advance, and shall not exceed $4 per day for each day actually and necessarily employed.

"SEC. 16. That the compensation of the enumerators shall be ascertained and fixed by the Director of the Census as follows: In subdivisions where he shall deem such allowance sufficient, an allowance of not less than 2 nor more than 3 cents for each living inhabitant and for each death reported; not less than 15 nor more than 20 cents for each farm; and not less than 30 nor more than 35 cents for each establishment of productive industry enumerated and returned may be given in full compensation for all services. For all other subdivisions per diem rates shall be fixed by the Director of the Census according to the difficulty of enumeration, having reference to the nature of the region to be canvassed and the density or sparseness of settlement, or other considerations pertinent thereto; but the compensation allowed to any enumerator in any such district shall not be less than $3 nor more than $6 per day of ten hours' actual field work each. The subdivisions to which the several rates of compensation shall apply shall be designated by the Director of the Census at least two weeks in advance of the enumeration. No claim for mileage or traveling expenses shall be allowed any enumerator in either class of subdivisions, except in extreme cases, and then only when authority has been previously granted by the Director of the Census, and the decision of the Director as to the amount due any enumerator shall be final.

"SEC. 17. That the special agents appointed under the provisions of this act shall have equal authority with the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act, and shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from their usual place of residence: And provided further, That no pay or allowance in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed special agents when employed in the Census Office on other than the special work committed to them, and no appointments of special agents shall be made for clerical work.

"SEC. 18. That no supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, interpreter, or special agent shall enter upon his duties until he has taken and subscribed to an oath or affirmation, to be prescribed by the Director of the Census; and no supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, or special agent shall be accompanied by or assisted in the performance of his duties by any person not duly appointed as an officer or employee of the Census Office, and to whom an oath or affirmation has not been duly administered. All appointees and employees provided for in this act shall be appointed or employed, and if examined, so examined, as the case may be, solely with reference to their fitness to perform the duties herein provided to be by such employee or appointee performed, and without reference to their political party affiliations.

"SEC. 19. That the enumeration of the population required by this act shall commence on the 1st day of June, 1900, and on the 1st day of June of the year in which each succeeding enumeration shall be made, and be taken as of that date. And it shall be the duty of each enumerator to complete the enumeration of his district and to prepare the returns hereinbefore required to be made, and to forward the same to the supervisor of census of his district, on or before the 1st day of July in such year: Provided, That in any city having 8,000 inhabitants or more under the preceding census the enumeration of the population shall be taken and completed within two weeks from the 1st day of June as aforesaid.

"SEC. 20. That if any person shall receive or secure to himself any fee, reward, or compensation as a consideration for the appointment or employment of any person as enumerator or clerk or other employee, or shall in any way receive or secure to himself any part of the compensation provided in this act for the services of any enumerator or clerk or other employee, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $3,000, or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 21. That any supervisor, supervisor's clerk, enumerator, interpreter, special agent, or other employee, who, having taken and subscribed the oath of office required by this act, shall, without justifiable cause, neglect or refuse to perform the duties enjoined on him by this act, or shall, without the authority of the Director of the Census, communicate to any person not authorized to receive the same any information gained by him in the performance of his duties, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding $500; or if he shall willfully and knowingly swear or affirm falsely, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not exceeding three years and be fined not exceeding $800; or if he shall willfully and knowingly make a false certificate or a fictitious return, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction of either of the last-named offenses he shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 and be imprisoned not exceeding two years.

"SEC. 22. That each and every person more than 20 years of age belonging to any family residing in any enumeration district or subdivision, and in case of the absence of the heads and other members of any such family, then any representative of such family, shall be, and each of them hereby is, required, if thereto requested by the Director, supervisor, or enumerator, to render a true account to the best of his or her knowledge, of every person belonging to such family in the various particulars required, and whoever shall willfully fail or refuse to render such true account shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $100. And every president, treasurer, secretary, director, agent, or other officer of every corporation, and every establishment of productive industry, whether conducted as a corporate body, limited liability company, or by private individuals, from which answers to any of the schedules, inquiries, or statistical interrogatories provided for by this act are herein required, who shall, if thereto requested by the Director, supervisor, enumerator, or special agent, willfully neglect or refuse to give true and complete answers to any inquiries authorized by this act, or shall willfully give false information, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding $10,000, to which may be added imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year.

"SEC. 23. That all fines and penalties imposed by this act may be enforced by indictment or information in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 24. That the Director of the Census may authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for the traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Census Office and the incidental expenses essential to the carrying out of this act, as herein provided for, and not otherwise, including the rental of sufficient quarters in the District of Columbia and the furnishing thereof and the maintenance of the printing outfit in the Census Office.

"SEC. 25. That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to print and bind in the Census Office such blanks, circulars, envelopes, and other items as may be necessary; and to print, publish, and distribute from time to time bulletins and reports of the preliminary and other results of the various investigations required by this act.

"SEC. 26. That in case the Director of the Census deems it expedient he may contract for the use of electrical or mechanical devices for tabulating purposes: Provided, That in such case due notice shall be given to the public, and no system of tabulation shall be adopted until after a practical test of its merits in competition with other systems which may be offered.

"SEC. 27. That all mail matter, of whatever class, relative to the census and addressed to the Census Office, the Director of the Census, Assistant Director, chief clerk, supervisors, enumerators, or special agents, and indorsed 'Official business, Department of the Interior, Census Office,' shall be transmitted free of postage, and by registered mail if necessary, and so marked: Provided, That if any person shall make use of such indorsement to avoid the payment of postage or registry fee on his or her private letter, package, or other matter in the mail the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $300, to be prosecuted in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 28. That the Secretary of the Interior, on request of the Director of the Census, is hereby authorized to call upon any other department or office of the Government for information pertinent to the work herein provided for.

"SEC. 29. That such records, books, and files as relate to preceding censuses, and the printing-office outfit used in the Eleventh Census, and such furniture and property of whatever nature used at the Eleventh Census as may be necessary in conducting the work of the Census Office and can be spared from present uses, shall be transferred to the custody and control of the Census Office created by this act. The said furniture and property shall be inventoried by the proper officers of the Department of the Interior when such transfer is made, and a copy of the inventory filed and preserved in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Director of the Census.

"SEC. 30. That upon the request of the governor of any State or Territory, or the chief officer of any municipal government, the Director of the Census shall furnish such governor or municipal officer with a copy of so much of the population returns as will show the names, with the age, sex, color, or race, and birthplace only of all persons enumerated within the territory in the jurisdiction of such government, upon payment of the actual cost of making such copies; and the amounts so received shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, to be placed to the credit of, and in addition to, the appropriations made for taking the census.

"SEC. 31. That the Director of the Census shall provide the Census Office with a seal containing such device as he may select, and he shall file a description of such seal with an impression thereof in the office of the Secretary of State. Such seal shall remain in the custody of the Director of the Census, and shall be affixed to all certificates and attestations that may be required from the Census Office.

"SEC. 32. That for the organization and equipment of the Census Office to perform the preparatory work necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, the sum of $1,000,000, to be available on the passage of this act, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to continue available until exhausted. Of said appropriation such amount as may be considered by the Director of the Census to be necessary for immediate preliminary printing may be expended under the direction of the Public Printer. And the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury, on or before October 1, 1890, further estimates for the work herein provided for.

"Sec. 33. That the act entitled 'An act to provide for the taking of the Eleventh and subsequent censuses,' approved March 1, 1889, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill, as it will finally be enacted into law, may be dispensed with, as the bill has been passed by the Senate substantially as it appears here, with certain amendments in part incorporated in the conference report from the House bill and in part a portion of the Senate bill amended in certain ways.

This conference report was adopted in the House of Representatives yesterday, and in connection with the consideration of the matter a full and complete statement was made and printed. It will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, at page 2663.

The essential differences in the bill as here presented and in the bill as originally passed by the Senate will be found to be that the power and authority of the Director of the Census is somewhat increased. The bureau, however, is, as provided in the original census bill, organized within the Interior Department. The number of employees contemplated by the Senate bill remains the same, with the exception of a disbursing clerk, provided for in the census bill as here presented.

Mr. SPOONER. The House bill made the census an independent bureau, did it not?

Mr. CARTER. The House bill made it an independent bureau.

Mr. SPOONER. And the conference report makes it a bureau of the Interior Department?

Mr. CARTER. It makes it a bureau of the Interior Department. There was another feature of the bill which challenged some attention, and which does not appear in this bill as produced by the conference committee. It will be recalled that certain officers—the enumerators, I believe—were to be selected from the two political parties, or from more if such exist, in the proportion of two-thirds to one party and one-third to the other. Upon that question I will say that after very full and mature deliberation we concluded that the present arrangement is better.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will say to the Senator that there was no limitation in the Senate bill as to the officers who were protected by that provision. It simply provided that not more than two-thirds should belong to any one party.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me? Do I understand that that provision was taken out by the conference committee?

Mr. CARTER. In that we agreed with the House provision. That was for the reason that upon very mature deliberation the conferees were of the opinion that the designation of a certain proportion of the employees to be taken from political parties would in and of itself import into the census work the very feature we most earnestly desired from all points of view to exclude. By and through that peculiar provision the Director of the Census would be compelled to open a set of books with all the political parties in the country. That political feature being once imported by authority of Congress, would of necessity be regarded as in some measure flavoring or coloring every feature of the census work.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would not the Director of the Census be obliged to ask the politics of every employee from the highest to the lowest?

Mr. CARTER. There is no question about that. It was deemed best to enact in the law provisions requiring that the test of merit, and merit alone, should be applied, without reference to the party affiliations of any employee.

Mr. PASCO. May I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. PASCO. How is that test of merit determined in the bill now reported by the conference committee? Is it through a civil-service examination?

Mr. CARTER. That test of merit will be applied as the Senate has heretofore directed, by and through an examination to be conducted under such rules and regulations as the Director of the Census, the person charged with the responsibility, may direct.

Mr. PASCO. Which section provides for that examination?

Mr. CARTER. Section 5, the Senator will observe, makes the provision referred to.

Mr. PASCO. There is nothing about a nonpartisan examination there. The provision says:

Subject to such examination as said Director may prescribe.

He may prescribe a purely political examination. It seems to me that the Senate conferees should have adhered to the provision that was put in the bill by a very large majority of the Senate, including both sides of the Senate Chamber. I do not see anything in section 5 that protects us from a partisan census. It is well known that there were grave suspicions that there was such a census as that taken ten years ago.

It is well known that in the city of New York alone there were enough names left off the census list which, if placed on that list, would have allowed an additional member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York; and if there is no protection whatever from partisanship in this census there are grave reasons to apprehend that it will enter into the taking of the present census. I see nothing in section 5 that prevents such a result.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, as a conferee on the part of the minority on the census bill, I will try to explain the motives which influenced me in agreeing to the report as made and as we have it before the Senate to-day.

The provision in the bill which passed the Senate requiring that not more than two-thirds of the employees and appointees under the bill should be members of the same political party was very objectionable to me for this reason: In the South, if you have a Director required to carry out that provision, and he undertook to find enough intelligent Republicans in every enumeration district to give them the one-third and to give the other party the two-thirds, I do not hesitate to say they could not be found, taking the districts through, in a third of them.

Now, we have provided that the employees and appointees shall undergo such examination as the Director may see fit to institute or order, having reference solely to their fitness. If the Director is a partisan and is narrow and determined to have a partisan census, the provision in the Senate bill which required him not to give all the appointees to one party would simply be an excuse for, as well as direction to, him to give to one party in the South at least a third and to the other party two-thirds.

You can not get a nonpartisan census unless the man who is at the head of the Bureau is an honest man and proposes to stand by the law as we write it. We can not be responsible for his administration of it. We will make the act like it ought to be. We will guard and limit it as best we can; and if he shall, after his appointment and after the power is given him, make it a partisan census and abuse the power, we can not help ourselves. That is all there is about it.

As the Senator from Montana has said, that provision would have required that every applicant for enumerator, every applicant for supervisor, every applicant for a clerkship should be set down and some evidence produced as to what party he belonged to. I thought it was best to make a good clean law; and while those of us who take this view may be "buncoed," if I may use the phrase, the responsibility will rest with those who make the appointment of the Director and upon the Director after he is appointed, whether he will carry out the law as we intend it and as we have written it, or in a narrow, partisan spirit.

Mr. MONEY. What is the provision to which the Senator refers?

Mr. TILLMAN. It expressly declares that the appointments shall be made solely with reference to their fitness and character and not with reference to their partisan relationship.

Mr. RAWLINS. May I ask the Senator where that clause appears in the conference report?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not had time to get the bill since the report was agreed to in the other House.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MASON. I wish to make an inquiry. Is the Senator from South Carolina going to make any remarks on this question? I see the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] is in his seat. Will the Senator yield to me that I may have an understanding in regard to a matter?

The Committee on Printing reported favorably a resolution which ordered the printing of the depositions of certain persons taken before an investigating committee in reference to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. After it was passed the Senator from Kentucky entered a motion to reconsider.

I do not know just what date it was entered, but it was entered in time. I did not happen to be in the Chamber at the time it was entered, and I am informed that the Public Printer has started to print a part of the evidence. Now, the Senator from Kentucky suggests that my resolution only calls for the printing of a part of the evidence and that it ought all to be printed in justice to the parties, and I can see the justice of that statement. I had no disposition to print any part that might be offensive to anyone or to do anything that did not include the full opportunity of defense if a defense were required.

I have never read the evidence and have never seen it, and have no special interest in it. I simply want to have it printed so that all the facts may be laid before the Senate. I desire that the resolution may include all the depositions, or else I desire to dispose of the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Kentucky. In order to have a perfect understanding, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be reconsidered and amended to include all the evidence taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Chair understands that the matter is not properly before the Senate and that the resolution can not be amended unless it be brought back to the Senate by reconsideration or in some other way.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator from Kentucky will consent to have that done, it will not take a moment. If it is going to take much, I withdraw the whole subject.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MASON. Yes; I yield to hear the Senator's statement of what he is willing to do. There seems to be a desire to have this evidence printed, and I do not wish to do anyone any injustice by printing a part, if it is all desired, and I am very sure the Senator from Kentucky does not want to withhold any of the evidence. I merely want to know what plan he will suggest, either to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, amend it, and pass it by unanimous consent, or else let me have a vote upon his motion to reconsider.

Mr. TILLMAN. It appears that this matter is one that could be deferred, unless the printing is necessary for some action to be taken in this body before we adjourn. What is the Senator from Illinois trying to do? If he will explain it, I will give way to a reasonable request.

Mr. MASON. I either want this motion—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARTER. It is manifest that this matter interjected here will require mutual explanation by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Illinois, and I think we had better dispose of the report before that is taken up.

THE CENSUS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11815) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. TILLMAN. The question has been raised or the point made by some Senator, I have forgotten whom, that the examination for appointees and employees under the census bill which we have does not bear on the partisan aspect of the case at all. If the Senators will look at the end of section 18, as the bill is printed in the RECORD as having been reported and agreed to by the House, at the latter part of that section they will read these words:

All appointees and employees provided for in this act shall be appointed or employed, and if examined, so examined, as the case may be, solely with reference to their fitness to perform the duties herein provided to be by such employee or appointee performed, and without reference to their political party affiliations.

The proposed law, as far as I can understand it—and I gave the subject very deep and close study and attention after I was appointed on the committee—will be a good census act. It insures an efficient corps of officers and appointees, and will give us a non-partisan census, which will be satisfactory to the country and a credit to the administrator if the Director will do his duty and simply carry it out in good faith and with a decent regard for the conditions which exist in certain sections of this country where all the decency and all the intelligence pretty much are on one side and all the ignorance is on the other.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, one word in line with the suggestion made by the Senator from South Carolina. This bill was framed, and the purpose of those who had to do with it was that it should be framed, so as to have fitness the sole test for persons to be employed in connection with this work. The taking of the decennial census, in conformity with a requirement of the Constitution, furnishing as it does a basis for representation from the States in the lower House of Congress, should in the minds of all good men rise above the trifling ephemeral party prejudice and feeling of the hour.

The census embraces, as elaborated, a line of statistical matter, the value of which must of necessity be greatly impaired if the understanding can justly exist, or if the suspicion may properly arise, that the facts and figures were collected, not for the sole purpose of bringing forth the truth, but for the unworthy purpose of attempting to prostitute a great national undertaking for a mere partisan advantage.

I trust that throughout every department of the Government having to do with the census work henceforth until its final completion, the purposes and motives of those who framed the proposed law will at all times be regarded, so that the census taken at the close of this eventful century will be one in which all parties and all sections and all communities in our common country will have unlimited and abiding confidence. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. PETTUS. Did the Senator from Montana have read all the changes made by the report?

Mr. CARTER. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, for the purpose of saving time and likewise avoiding unnecessary work of reproducing, all the changes appear in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, at page 2665, the full and complete statement having been printed in the proceedings of the House of Representatives. We can have the report duplicated in the RECORD of to-day if desirable, but it does not appear that any good purpose would be thereby subserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

EIGHT-HOUR BILL.

Mr. TURLEY. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of, or work done for, the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate. I do not know what the bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on taking up the bill for consideration.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the bill may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering a general appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill is not up yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not yet been taken up. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask to have the motion put to see whether the Senate is going to take up the bill or not. If it is taken up, I will then agree that it shall be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Pending the motion, I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12198, making appropriations for fortifications and ordnance.

Mr. TURLEY. My motion is entitled to be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Tennessee can not be displaced by a motion to take up another bill. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his motion?

Mr. TURLEY. No, sir; I want my motion put, and then if the bill is taken up I shall be willing to give way to the appropriation bill. But I want the motion put.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall vote for the Senator's motion when it is voted on, but I understand that a motion to take up a general appropriation bill has preference.

Mr. GORMAN. It is always in order.

Mr. HALE. Under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to take up House bill 7389.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair rule that under the rule that appropriation bills shall be given the precedence at all times the Senator from California can not make his motion at any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does so rule. If it is the desire of the Senator from California afterwards to move to take up the appropriation bill he can do so.

Mr. HALE. But that will be after the bill moved by the Senator from Tennessee is up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be after the bill is up. It will be in the power of the Senate to lay it aside at any time after it is taken up.

Mr. HALE. But the rules do not proceed upon the assumption that an appropriation bill has by a vote to displace something else. They give the preference to appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is right as to the morning hour, until 2 o'clock, but the Chair rules otherwise, the motion of the Senator from Tennessee having been made after the morning hour closed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the ruling of the Chair is that under clause 1 of Rule IX a motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill or a revenue bill must be made during the morning hour to have precedence. I can only say that that is contrary to my understanding of the rule.

Mr. HALE. It is contrary to the entire spirit of the rule, because appropriation bills are not considered commonly in the morning hour, but after the morning hour. If that is the ruling of the Chair, or if it is the Clerk's ruling, I should be glad to know,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Rule IX provides that—

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the Calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the Calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privileges, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar, which motion shall not be open to amendment.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which if carried shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar.

Fourth. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the Calendar. Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate and shall have precedence in the order above named, and may be submitted as in the nature and with all the rights of questions of order.

The roll will be called on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HALE. I do not by any means—

Mr. TURLEY. I ask that my motion may be put.

Mr. HALE. I do not by any means, for one, admit that the ruling of the Chair is correct, limiting the preference of appropriation bills to the morning hour. That has never been considered or thought of by the Senate. The rule has been, and especially has it been enforced near the close of a session, that, in order to get the business finished which must go through, appropriation bills shall have the preference during the entire day. If the clerks in looking up this matter have made up their minds to countervail this understanding of the Senate, I for one enter a protest against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling is made by the present occupant of the chair, and there is no necessity for the Senator from Maine to refer to it as the ruling of the clerks.

Mr. HALE. The necessity exists in the mind of the Senator from Maine, not in that of the Chair.

Mr. FAULKNER. It strikes me that the ruling of the Chair—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. The roll will be called.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is exactly in accordance with what has always been the practice.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is sick and unable to be here. He has a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I think. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is absent from the Chamber.

Mr. McLAURIN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MONEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE].

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to ask if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. CLARK. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. BATE (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to know if the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. BATE. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. BACON. I announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. CULLOM. I do not see the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] in his seat. I will transfer the pair I have with that Senator so that he will stand paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. That will leave two to vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not fair.

Mr. CHILTON. I will not do that, if there is any question about it. I withdraw my vote, if there is any question about it.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). As the exchange of pairs was not carried out, I think I ought to withdraw my vote, as the Senator from Delaware is not present and has not voted. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 19; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of or work done for the United States or any Territory, or the District of Columbia.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he will now yield to me to call up the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks that the eight-hour bill be temporarily laid aside in order that the fortifications appropriation bill may be taken up.

Mr. TURLEY. Then the eight-hour bill will keep its place and will come up after the appropriation bill is disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will if the appropriation bill is laid before the Senate in that manner.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that requires unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. PERKINS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes. It is one of the general appropriation bills passed by the House of Representatives, and if it does not pass the Senate this evening it will probably fail to become a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the bill indicated by him be now taken up.

Mr. TURLEY. I hope the Senator from Alabama will withdraw his objection and let the appropriation bill come in and the eight-hour bill keep its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. The naval appropriation bill should be laid before the Senate in order to get it into a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference requested by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. TURLEY. Let us have the yeas and nays on that question.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to say a word, in my judgment the bill asked to be called up will take but a few minutes.

Mr. TURLEY. We are perfectly willing to let the appropriation bill come in at this time if the eight-hour bill can be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GALLINGER. The question is not debatable, and I insist on the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll will be called on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. PASCO's name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON], and withholds his vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allen,	Foraker,	McLaurin,	Proctor,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Rawlins,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], who has charge of the pending appropriation bill, kindly yields to me a moment that I may make a report.

From the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7343) authorizing the Commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to pay certain dividends barred by the act of February 21, 1881, I am instructed to report it favorably, and to submit a written report thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered and put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to pay, from the funds in his hands available for that purpose, to all claimants otherwise legally entitled thereto who have not yet received them, the 62 per cent in dividends heretofore declared in favor of the depositors of the company, notwithstanding the limitation for the payment of such dividends contained in section 8 of an act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved February 21, 1881.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION ON NIAGARA FRONTIER.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask the Senator from California to yield to me in order that I may have a bill from the House of Representatives laid before the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. There are several Senators who have bills in which they are interested, which I understand will call for no discussion and will occasion no particular delay, and so I will yield for a few minutes.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 12064.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 12064) to encourage the holding of a Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

Mr. VEST. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read, and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. VEST. I want to inquire of the Senator in charge of this bill under what authority this corporation is created? I did not understand it from the reading of the bill. Is it the State of New York?

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is a corporation under the laws of the State of New York. A special charter was granted to the exposition company by the last legislature of the State.

Mr. VEST. I am not disposed to antagonize the bill, although I must say frankly to the Senator that I think there ought to be more than $500,000 required to be subscribed when the Government pays $500,000. We have passed several of these bills—

Mr. PLATT of New York. The citizens of Buffalo have subscribed over a million and a half of dollars and the State of New York has subscribed $300,000.

Mr. VEST. I understood from the reading of the bill—and that is all I know about it, although it comes from a committee of which I am a member, but I was not present when it was passed upon, and I will say to the Senator that I am not an enemy of the bill—but I understand from its reading here by the Secretary that when $500,000 has been subscribed the Government is to become liable for $500,000 immediately, for the erection of buildings, I suppose.

Mr. PLATT of New York. That is the least that can be subscribed. There has been already $1,500,000 subscribed by the citizens of Buffalo, as I have said.

Mr. VEST. The bill itself specifies $500,000, and, as I understand the last section, it says that the Government shall be liable for $500,000 immediately upon the passage of the act. I ask the Secretary to again read the last section of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the appropriation herein made of $500,000 in all shall take effect and become available immediately upon the passage of this act.

Mr. VEST. Does that mean that as soon as $500,000 is subscribed by the stockholders the Government shall be liable for $500,000, or does it mean that the Government shall be liable immediately on the passage of the act without reference to the other payments?

Mr. PLATT of New York. I do not think the Senator is correct in his supposition. As I understand, not a cent can be paid out of the Treasury until the Secretary of the Treasury has given his approval.

Mr. VEST. One section says that the Government shall be liable for $500,000 when $500,000 is subscribed, and the last section says the Government shall be liable for $500,000 when the act is passed. I think that ought to be corrected so that we can understand it. I am not opposing the Senator's bill, but I think it ought to be made clear and explicit. Under the last section, as soon as this bill becomes a law, the officers of this corporation can draw upon the Treasury for $500,000. If, then, it is said, "But you have not raised the $500,000," they will say, "Yes; but the last section is mandatory and without condition." There ought not to be room for any such question as that under the bill.

Mr. McBRIDE. As a member of the committee which considered this bill, I wish to say—

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. McBRIDE. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. The proviso in this bill, which is found in section 4, on page 7, is very explicit, and I think it will control the last provision to which the Senator from Missouri has referred. The proviso states explicitly:

That no liability against the Government shall be incurred, and no expenditure of money under this act shall be made, until the officers of said exposition shall have furnished the Secretary of the Treasury proofs to his satisfaction that there has been obtained by said exposition corporation subscriptions of stock in good faith, contributions, donations, or appropriations from all sources for the purposes of said exposition a sum aggregating not less than $500,000.

Mr. VEST. I referred to that section, but let the Senator look at the last section.

Mr. FORAKER. The last section, I think, would have to be construed with reference to what I have just read, and it would be held to mean nothing more than that the money is available whenever the conditions precedent to the use of it shall have been complied with, and the provision that the appropriation of $500,000 shall become available immediately upon the passage of this act would mean available, of course, immediately upon the passage of this act when those conditions in the proviso I read shall have been complied with. I take occasion to speak about this bill because there is another bill for Toledo, Ohio, which is framed in the same way as the pending bill, and I am familiar with that bill.

Mr. VEST. It may be that one judge would decide as the Senator from Ohio says, and that another judge would decide it in another way. The rule of construction and interpretation would demand that the whole act be taken together and the sections reconciled, if possible.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. VEST. I am not opposing the bill, and I have only to say that if I had charge of it, I would remove that ambiguity, because there will be trouble about it, in all probability, with those two sections confronting each other.

Mr. FORAKER. If we had more time, perhaps we could amend it.

Mr. McBRIDE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the $500,000 appropriation provided for in the bill is for a Government exhibit only, and not a dollar of that is to be appropriated and used by the commission in the city of Buffalo. Therefore the money can only be used for the purposes specified in the bill.

Mr. VEST. I understand that; but the question is as to when the money is to be paid.

Mr. FORAKER. It does not seem to me, with all due deference to the Senator from Missouri, that there can really be any danger of the money being paid until these conditions are complied with, because, while the bill says that the money is available—and perhaps better language might be used in that connection in view of this proviso—yet the proviso remains, and is explicit, and it positively prohibits the Secretary of the Treasury from taking any action in the matter of payment until all the conditions precedent have been complied with. It expressly so states, and I do not think any Secretary of the Treasury would make any payment or allow any payment to be made until the conditions were complied with.

I suppose the bill could be amended and sent back to the other House if there was time to do so. I defer to the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] in regard to that.

I have the same interest as the Senator from New York has, and I would be satisfied with the Toledo bill as it came from the House if the Senator from New York is satisfied with his bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4852) to ratify agreements with the Indians of the Lower Brule and Rosebud reservations, in South Dakota, and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5130) to provide for the erection of a building for the Department of Justice, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3973) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Sebastian Belkard; and

A bill (H. R. 12102) to encourage the holding of the Ohio centennial and Northwest exposition at the city of Toledo, Ohio.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11803) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by H. C. Newcomer, captain of engineers, in favor of Stone & Stansell; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to state that as soon as the fortifications bill is disposed of I shall deem it my duty to move a short executive session.

IMMIGRATION AND CONTRACT-LABOR LAWS FOR HAWAII.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11247) to extend the anti-contract labor laws of the United States to Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. GORMAN. Regular order.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think we ought to deal with that piecemeal. We ought to have dealt with the whole question before this time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that it is impossible to extend a complete and symmetrical system of laws to Hawaii during the few hours that remain of this session. All that this bill attempts to do is to extend the present immigration, contract labor, and Chinese-exclusion acts now in force in the United States to the islands of Hawaii. The islands have come under the jurisdiction and authority of the United States, and it is of the utmost importance that the immigration, contract labor laws, and Chinese-exclusion acts of the United States should be extended to them.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the proposition before the Senate?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There are being imported into the islands to-day thousands of laborers under contract, and if the policy of excluding contract labor is a wise one in the United States, as I believe it to be, the same policy should be extended to the Hawaiian Islands. I trust the Senator from Nevada will not interpose objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I shall not object, but I will offer as an amendment House bill 11191, extending to those islands the laws relating to the customs and internal revenue. I have no objection to the bill if the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I am very desirous of seeing the bill proposed by the Senator from Indiana become a law, but we have the fortifications bill before the Senate, and I might say parenthetically that the bill he proposes to call up is a fortifications bill, so to speak.

It fortifies the people of this country from the great inroads of peon and contract labor from Japan and other countries of the Orient. Ships are under contract to bring contract laborers from the Azore Islands. I think there is no measure of more importance. Certainly it is a proper fortifications bill, and I should like to see it added to the pending bill.

Mr. STEWART. What law is there to stop the Japanese from coming into San Francisco now?

Mr. PERKINS. They are bringing them in Japanese steamers into the Hawaiian Islands now—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, what is the order of business before the Senate?

Mr. PERKINS. And there have been contracts made for over 7,000 since we annexed that Territory.

Mr. STEWART. Will this law—

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is this a debatable question?

Mr. STEWART. Will the extension of the contract-labor laws to Hawaii exclude those people?

Mr. PERKINS. It will when they come under contract.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield further?

Mr. PERKINS. I hope unanimous consent will be given. If it is not I must insist that we proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the bill being taken up, but I will offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Indiana. The Senator asks unanimous consent that the bill the title of which has been stated by him be now taken up.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that we may proceed with the consideration of the fortifications bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. GORMAN. All I desired was that we should go on with the appropriation bill. The Senate is very well aware that unless the appropriation bills are considered this afternoon some of them may be lost, and I only wanted to appeal to the Senator in charge of the bill to take it up. Probably it can be disposed of in one hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is insisted upon.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and continued to the end of line 22, on page 5.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like the attention of the Senator from California as to the provision on page 5, from lines 15 to 22, for machine guns, caliber .30, ordered by the Ordnance Bureau. I understand that those guns were a part of our war outfit and were provided for out of the allotment of $50,000,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I did not understand the question of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. I asked for some information in regard to the item on page 5, lines 15 to 17, machine guns, caliber .30, amounting to $100,000. My impression is—I do not know that my memory is correct about it—that provision was made for them out of the allotment from the $50,000,000 for war purposes.

Mr. PERKINS. The estimate made by the Department for the appropriation this year amounted to $12,151,898. The hearings before the committee in the House go into this matter in detail. It was decided to reduce the appropriation from the amount estimated for to $4,744,798, and this reduction was made so that it would be a pro rata reduction. It had the approval of the Chief of Ordnance. We appropriated during the last Congress, under the deficiency act, the amount appropriated from the allotment and the general appropriation, $30,918,232.

While we did not go into the detail of these guns as to the particular caliber, etc., the reduction was made by the Chief of Ordnance, or the gentleman who is acting as the Chief of Ordnance at this time, Maj. C. S. Smith, and these figures meet with his approval, providing we make any reduction from the general estimates that were submitted by the War Department. I think therefore it was expedient and wise that we should accept their division of this amount of money, inasmuch as they were conversant with the full matter of the guns in detail as to caliber.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that during the last year we have expended for the fortifications nearly $31,000,000. That is true. It grew out of the conditions that existed because of the war. A certain part of the national defense fund was spent on these works, and the total of the bill is therefore reduced to about $5,000,000. I did not find in the hasty glance that I made over the papers any special recommendation for this new item—for it is new—for these machine guns and also for the Sims-Dudley guns. I should like to have some information about those provisions, if the Senator has it at hand.

Mr. PERKINS. I will send for the Estimate Book.

Mr. GORMAN. We can pass the item for the moment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can give the Senator from Maryland some information about it.

Mr. GORMAN. I should be very glad to have it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Machine guns have been appropriated for every year for a good many years. They are kept constantly on hand, or something of a supply is. They have not a supply of modern .30 caliber, and there was difficulty in mounting a battery or two for Cuba. Machine guns were engaged in Santiago and El Caney, and were considered an especially brilliant chapter in those operations. Captain Parker commanded the guns, and it so happened the other day that I was in the presence of Governor Roosevelt.

Parker's name was referred to. I said, "Do you know him?" He said, "Indeed, I do. He was right by my side." He went on with a very high commendation of the guns and of the excellent service they rendered. It is not a new appropriation at all.

Mr. GORMAN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is a new appropriation—that is to say, that they have acquired these guns heretofore under the general appropriation, with no specific item, as in the pending bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Machine guns have been named in the paragraph in previous years—those two exact words.

Mr. GORMAN. I have the bill analyzed, as we always have before the committee, and this for the first time appears. It is new.

Mr. HAWLEY. The matter of machine guns appears as new?

Mr. GORMAN. They have acquired them heretofore under the general appropriation. This is a new item. It did not appear in the last act. That is the reason why I asked for the information.

Mr. HAWLEY. As an independent paragraph?

Mr. GORMAN. As an independent paragraph. Why was it not covered, as heretofore, in the general appropriation for the acquisition of guns of that character? That is the information I desire. Why is it brought in as a separate item here for the first time?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is hardly covered by the general appropriation. I know of my own personal knowledge that it has been contained in several appropriation bills. I know, because the guns are made in my town.

Mr. GORMAN. It is new and here for the first time.

Mr. HAWLEY. It may be the first time that it is grammatically independent of some other gun.

Mr. GORMAN. I want to get the information. We can pass it over for the time being.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice that the Committee on Appropriations recommend the passage of the fortifications bill exactly as it came from the House of Representatives, which is something very unusual and something very gratifying if it is justified by the terms of the bill itself. I will ask the Senator from California to inform me, if he can readily do so—perhaps he may have already stated it to the Senate—what the total amount of the appropriation is.

Mr. PERKINS. Four million seven hundred and forty-four thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight dollars.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose that that very moderate appropriation results from the fact, to which the Senator from Maryland has alluded, that very large appropriations were made during the last year for fortifications from the $50,000,000 defense fund appropriated by Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. Twelve million eight hundred and sixty-five thousand eight hundred and forty dollars and sixty cents was allotted from the $50,000,000 special fund.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that all that has been expended?

Mr. PERKINS. Also $8,674,898, appropriated subsequent to that appropriation. That was embodied in the deficiency bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Making about $30,000,000?

Mr. PERKINS. Making $9,377,494, which is in the general bill. It makes $30,918,232.60 as a total.

Mr. CHANDLER. That accounts for the small appropriation in this bill, and I am willing to vote for the bill exactly as it came from the House.

My opinion may not be worth much, because I speak only from a general knowledge of the subject, but I have looked the bill through, and it seems to me that the various provisions are carefully made. There is a limit of 22 cents a pound to the appropriation of $535,000 for guns, and I understand the Senator from Maryland believes that that is a sufficiently low price for those guns. I am not certain whether or not the Senator believes that price to be a fair one.

Mr. GORMAN. To answer the Senator, heretofore I have tried to reduce that amount to 21 cents or 20 cents, but the Senate and House both voted that 22 cents would be a fair reduction. We have reduced it, I think, from 26 now to 22, which makes about $440 a ton for this material. Whether it now can be made for less I am not prepared to say.

I know that the Ordnance Department have antagonized in every case the attempted reduction, and have in the beginning stated that it was impossible to get it even for 24 cents, and now they recommend 23 cents as the proper price. But not having information which would warrant an amendment proposing a further reduction at this time, I permitted it to go on. That is all.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has undoubtedly noticed, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that the proposed price for armor for our battle ships is 27 cents a pound, and that the armor is merely armored plate. It is not carefully shaped and finished, certainly not with any such minuteness as is necessary for a high-power coast-defense gun. Apparently, I submit to the Senator, a high-power gun such as is made for the Army and Navy ought to cost twice as much per pound as any armor plate that we can conceive of according to known processes. Yet here it appears that while we are asked 27 cents a pound for our armor plate we are to get these finished guns, the best that modern ingenuity can devise, for 22 cents a pound. The 22 cents a pound may be too much, but it is very low as compared with 27 cents a pound for armor plate.

Now, Mr. President, this bill, I think, was wisely framed in the House, and it is nearly all of it for expenditures to be made for fortifications and guns that will be of value to the country. We have a right to expect that the departments of the Army and Navy which are concerned in modern defenses will want to make experimentation more or less on different lines, and we ought to grant money with reasonable liberality for experimentation.

I looked to see how much is in this bill for the Board of Ordnance and Fortification for experimentations concerning guns and all the paraphernalia which go along with guns. The amount on page 8 is only $100,000, and before that is to be expended the bill guards the subject by providing that the board must be satisfied that any invention which may be involved in any of the subjects of experimentation shall be subject to the use of the United States in case the invention is found to be a useful one. So, protesting that my opinion is not of any great value, I am very happy to say that I never have seen a bill any more carefully guarded or any more acceptable to my judgment or one which ought more quickly to be passed as it comes from the House of Representatives without amendment in the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the price of armor plate and of forgings for guns has been referred to. It was my impression that there was a difference in regard to the finishing—that the forgings were shaped, but furnished in the rough. I supposed the armor plate was planed and bored for the bolting—fitted partly or entirely for use on the ships. As the Senator is also a member of the Naval Committee, he can probably inform us in regard to that.

Mr. PERKINS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I was referring to the difference in price—22 cents for forgings and 27 cents for armor plate—and my inquiry was if there was not a difference in the cost of finishing, forgings being furnished in the rough, merely shaped, and armor plate being planed and grooved and bored.

Mr. PERKINS. Last year I made that inquiry of General Flagler, who appeared before us. My recollection is that he estimated that it was about 30 cents for finishing armor in addition to the 22 cents for forgings.

Mr. PROCTOR. Another matter occurs to me in discussing the question of calibers. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from California. I see here that there are several guns of the same nominal caliber as the Navy guns. I should like to inquire whether they are really of the same caliber so that the ammunition can be used interchangeably.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that the large guns, the 8, 10, and 12 inch are, but I am sorry to say that the small guns are not of the same caliber. As to the machine guns this year, the Chief of Ordnance not being present, I was not able to make that inquiry of him. Last year I did, and inquired why the same caliber did not exist in the Navy with the Marine Corps as with the infantry in the Army. The reply was that I should ask the Navy. I inquired of an officer in the Navy who was competent to give me a proper answer, and he referred me to the War Department. My friend, the Senator from Vermont, having been Secretary of War, and having supervised and directed the manufacture of a part of this armament, I now make the inquiry of him, asserting that there is no one so competent to answer as he is.

Mr. PROCTOR. At the present time I am not representing the War Department. It is my impression that the Senator is mistaken in regard to the caliber of the 8, 10, and 12 inch guns. I have been informed, and I believe it to be true, that there is not a single weapon, from the smallest pistol in the service of the Army and Navy to the largest seacoast gun, where the ammunition can be used interchangeably.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has been familiar for years with these appropriation bills and can tell how that is. At Guantanamo the Marine Corps was serving on shore with the Army. If either branch had got short of ammunition, there was not a single weapon that could be used by borrowing from the other corps. It seems to me this is an illustration of the harmony and beauty of the system which has prevailed between these two very important branches.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a movement going on to bring them to even calibers and interchangeable ammunition. Some one asks about the caliber of these machine guns. The Navy caliber adapted to small arms was two hundred and thirty-six thousandths, or otherwise .236, a little over one-fifth of an inch. The caliber of the Army gun is small enough in the judgment of many—it is .30—and it is especially unfortunate that the two arms should have different cartridges.

All our small arms should be of the same caliber, allowing interchangeable ammunition. The machine guns provided for in this bill are mostly intended, I think, for flank defenses in the forts on the coast. There is no mistake about the estimate for them. There is nothing about it that is discreditable nor doubtful. It is what the Department wants. The Ordnance officer estimated for $107,000. He was cut down $7,000. Probably he fared better than in some of the other appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the pending item to be passed over for the present?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Maryland suggested that this item wait for a few moments and that we pass on.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let it be so until we can get the estimate.

Mr. GORMAN. Now, Mr. President, before leaving the subject, I think the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] is rendering really a very great service to the country in calling attention again to the discrepancy between the calibers of guns of all descriptions for the Navy and the Army. In the very matter that we have just passed through, the small and insignificant affair, we have found that it was utterly impossible to use interchangeable ammunition.

The Navy had plenty of ammunition on board the vessels to supply the Army when they were short of ammunition, but every weapon differs in size, and as we go on from year to year appropriating for immense numbers that we are making, not only machine guns and guns of similar character, including in this item the rapid-fire gun, we are going further and further apart, which makes it all the more difficult to correct this defect, which is admitted, I believe, on all sides.

There ought to have been before this time some central authority composed of officers including both the Navy and the Army that could have adjusted this matter. It would have saved an untold amount of money if that could have been done. Now that you are entering upon another scheme of looking abroad and probably involving ourselves in all sorts of complications where we will be compelled to have both an army and navy employed, it becomes all the more desirable, and it would be a very wise thing if it could be taken in hand by the Congress and adjusted.

I assume from my knowledge of what has occurred in the past that it is going to be a very difficult matter indeed to ever get a recommendation from any Secretary of the Navy or Secretary of War to bring about this most desirable reform. The officers of both Departments have gotten into a groove. The majority of them, I believe, desire to separate their two Departments in this particular. We have ordered, as I said a moment ago, an immense number of larger guns and smaller, and we will be met by the statement that it will cost millions of dollars to make the change.

So with the War Department. The Senator from New Hampshire speaks of the Board of Fortifications. That Board of Fortifications was created, I think, upon the motion of General Logan, of Illinois, who gave the matter of fortifications great attention. It stands, however, now practically without any power. That was eliminated and all the power that we gave them was put in the hands of these bureau officers, the head of the Ordnance Department and the head of the Engineer Department. So there is to-day no central control—nobody to direct a uniform management of these affairs.

Whenever you go to the matter of reforming it by reorganizing it, one of the subjects that ought to be brought up and considered and insisted upon in connection with the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Vermont is to make the heads of these different corps or organizations and bureaus in the War Department subject to the control of the Secretary of War and the President of the United States every four years.

Mr. President, I want to say only one word about the cost of the steel for the guns. The Senator from New Hampshire called attention sharply to the fact that we have by law compelled the manufacturers to furnish this raw material in the rough for the manufacture of the 10 and 12 inch guns at 22 cents a pound.

That reduction, as I stated a moment ago, was, I think, upon my motion. It was an arbitrary reduction made by Congress against the protest of all the Ordnance officers of the War Department who were honestly of opinion at that time that it would be impossible to obtain from the two or three—I think at that time only two—great firms that could manufacture them, the tubes for the guns. But when the appropriation was made they did agree to it; they did furnish it, and they have furnished the very best character of steel; and it is now said that after the test which we have recently had it has stood greater test than the steel made for any other guns on the face of the earth; that even the Krupp is not better. So we have made a great saving in that respect.

But I do want to call attention, for I happened to be absent on committee service yesterday, to what occurred in the matter of the arbitrary reduction by Congress, if it is to be enacted into law, of the armor for these ships. I think, from the information I have been able to gather from a close study of this matter from the time we began to purchase armor, if that bill becomes a law as it passed here yesterday, with all the conditions that confront us and with the earnest desire that the majority of Congress, and certainly the Administration, have had to prepare for trouble, we will adjourn on Saturday, or at the end of to-morrow's session, having made provision for a large army with any amount of money to start it; that we shall have made no provision whatever that will be effective in the next two years for the increase of the Navy; and that by the provision of the bill as it stands as it passed the Senate you have not only prohibited any increase over that authorized by the act of last year, but the provision itself will prevent the completion of the ships of war that were ordered at the last session of Congress. So we will probably have for the time being, until 1901, a top-heavy Army and no Navy to go with them to our foreign possessions or elsewhere where they may be required to go, except what was improvised and constructed prior to the war with Spain.

While I am as anxious as any Senator to reduce the cost of armor, and while I believe firmly that there has been and is a very close understanding between the manufacturers of armor all over the world, and that from all the governments which have been constructing ships they have obtained a larger amount than the actual value or a fair value for the armor, yet under the conditions in which we are I fear that in our anxiety to economize, in our desire to prevent extortion, you have made provisions which will seriously embarrass the Government. If it were in a time of absolute peace or in a time when we were conducting the affairs of the Government as all Administrations have conducted them heretofore until we reached the present Administration by keeping out and not getting ourselves into a position to be involved in the quarrels of other nations, it would have been probably wise to have taken our manufacturers and given them an object lesson as you propose to do. But as to whether the policy which was agreed to yesterday in these conditions is wise or not I do not hesitate to express my individual opinion that it is unfortunate, and that while we shall be spending $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, probably six or seven hundred million dollars, to benefit and elevate peoples that are distant from us, it would have been better to have gone on and submitted to the extortion for the time being.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I heartily agree with everything the Senator from Maryland has said in regard to the importance of some action which will lead to uniformity of calibers of our different arms of the service in the Army and Navy. It would save money and it would greatly increase the efficiency of both branches of the service. It might save us a battle.

I will state that a bill was introduced early in the session looking to that end, providing for a board of Army and Navy officers, under the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, for the purpose of securing uniformity and general harmony of action. It was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and reported back promptly and favorably, and was then referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which the Senator from California is an honored and useful member, and, so far as I know, it still rests with that committee. I commend it to his attention.

NATIONAL WHITE CROSS OF AMERICA.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska provided the bill he desires to have considered does not lead to any discussion. I am informed by members of the Judiciary Committee that it is absolutely necessary that there should be an executive session later, and I am very desirous that the fortifications appropriation bill shall be disposed of in a very short time, as I think it can be if there is no interruption.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think the measure I wish considered will lead to any discussion whatever.

Mr. CHANDLER. On what subject does the Senator from Nebraska wish to speak?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska send to the desk the bill which he desires to have considered?

Mr. ALLEN. I was just going to call the Chair's attention to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I had taken the floor to make a few remarks on the fortifications appropriation bill, but will yield to the Senator from Nebraska if he will tell us what is the bill he desires to have considered.

Mr. ALLEN. I was not aware that the Senator from New Hampshire had the floor. Of course, I will yield to him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield to the Senator if he will state what the bill is.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a bill which I called up this morning and which was objected to by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but which I am led to believe by a conversation I have had with the Senator since he will not antagonize further. It is the bill (S. 5583) to incorporate the National White Cross of America, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the bill will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill has been read, has it not?

Mr. ALLEN. The bill has been read. I wish to have it amended in the way I have indicated on the copy sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The bill has been read.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The bill was read this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As stated by the Senator from Connecticut, the bill has been read.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have it read again.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his request.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move to amend the bill, on page 3, by striking out lines 24 and 25; and by striking out lines 1 and 2, on page 4; which read as follows:

For construction of one 18-inch Gathmann gun, $65,000.

For powder and projectiles for test of 18-inch Gathmann gun, $10,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will not prevail. The bill has passed the House of Representatives. This provision has been duly considered by the committees in both Houses; it has the approval of the War Department; and the general consensus of opinion of the Department is that it is a wise and judicious appropriation for the purpose named. Therefore I hope the amendment will not prevail and that the bill will be passed without amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, yesterday we voted an amendment to the naval appropriation bill appropriating $250,000 for experiments with the Gathmann guns, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; that is, we appropriated $250,000 for him to invest in these guns in his discretion. That being the case, until these guns have passed the experimental stage it does not seem to me necessary to purchase any more of them. I contend that they are in an experimental stage and that it has not yet been demonstrated that they are a success or can be made a success.

I have here a report of the Chief of Ordnance on this subject, from which it appears that—

An act of Congress approved June 10, 1893, provided $50,000 "for testing methods of throwing high explosives from guns on board ship with the ordinary velocities," this being an item in the regular naval appropriation bill for the years 1893 and 1897.

While the particular line of experiments was not specified, it was understood at the Navy Department that they were to be in connection with the so-called Gathmann gun and projectiles. Accordingly an improvised 12-inch gun was made of a tube intended for one of the 13-inch guns of the battleship Kearsarge, the intention being to use this tube for its original purpose after the Gathmann experiments were concluded, in case it survived them.

The gun was rapidly pushed to completion at the Washington Navy-Yard, and at the same time a number of projectiles were made of special type designed by Mr. Gathmann. The gun was completed about January, 1897, and was sent to the naval proving ground at Indian Head and mounted on a proof mount belonging to the station. It was first fired about February 4, 1897, the shells being filled with a colored liquid and fired through light wooden screens.

The shells were found to have too thin walls, as they broke up after leaving the gun, and some new shells having thicker walls were made, and fired about May 14, 1897. These shells gave better results, and various experiments were made to test the details of the shell, primer, etc., and finally there remained but to test the loaded projectile in the gun. This was done on June 9, 1897. The shell was of forged nickel-steel, and weighed, with its charge of wet gun cotton, 950 pounds, the weight of the gun cotton being 367 pounds.

This shell, like all the Gathmann shells of that date, had a movable piston-like base, which was considered one of its special features. On firing the gun there was a simultaneous explosion of the gun-cotton shell within the bore, which completely wrecked the gun and its mount, rendering it necessary to purchase a new tube for the Kearsarge. The cause of this premature explosion has never been satisfactorily accounted for, but is supposed to have been due to the faulty action or design of the primer and detonating charge. After this a number of experiments were carried on at Indian Head with projectiles of various kinds (designed by Mr. Gathmann) which were fired from an old muzzle-loading 8-inch converted rifle, their chief object being to show that long columns of wet gun cotton could be safely fired with powder impulse at moderately high velocities and pressures, and these experiments were attended with more or less success.

Further experiments were made in detonating large masses of wet gun cotton in contact with armor plates. In these experiments the gun cotton, containing only about 13 per cent of moisture, was placed in contact with the plate, and care was taken to secure an explosive of a high order. The results were not as marked as was expected, and in one instance they were surprisingly insignificant.

A heavy plate was, in one of the above-cited cases, broken by the explosion of 500 pounds of wet gun cotton, but as no comparison was made with any other explosive it is difficult to arrive at any definite conclusion as to what would have happened had 500 pounds of powder been exploded under like circumstances. In another of the cases 300 pounds of wet gun cotton was exploded against a plate with practically no effect.

The appropriation having been expended the Bureau of Ordnance, on October 14, 1897, notified the Gathmann Torpedo Company to that effect, and that no further experiments could be made.

We expended $50,000, then, in 1897 on these guns.

Subsequent to this the parties interested applied to the War Department, and a number of experiments were carried on under its auspices, and complete reports of these are on file in the Army Ordnance Bureau.

On July 5, 1898, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy recommended to the Secretary of the Navy that a joint board of army and naval officers be ordered "to consider the question of firing projectiles charged with high explosives from the guns of the military service of the United States." The Gathmann Torpedo Company requested to be heard by this board and were accorded the opportunity, and in making its report, on July 14, 1898—

Less than eight months ago—

the board concludes with the following remark:

"It is considered proper and pertinent to record its [the board's] opinion that the Gathmann system, if successful, would have a limited field of action as compared with modern ordnance, and the tests thus far made with this system have not shown results that warrant any further expenditure by the Government in its development."

After this, in October, 1898, at the request of the parties interested in this scheme, two naval officers of marked ability were directed by the Secretary of the Navy to visit Sandy Hook to investigate the extent of success that had attended the Gathmann experiments. These officers reported to the Secretary of the Navy, under date of November 4, 1898, the result of their investigations, and conclude as follows—

This was on the 4th of last November, only a month before Congress convened, and the board say:

We are therefore of the opinion that the Gathmann shell is not sufficiently developed to justify its adoption by the Government.

Now I insist that, having appropriated $250,000 yesterday for these experiments, we are not justified in appropriating $75,000 more to-day. We are treating these inventors with great liberality and great generosity by putting in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy $250,000, to be expended in his discretion in this connection, in view of the report on November 4 last of the Ordnance Bureau.

Among the many experiments made at Sandy Hook, the following are cited from the official reports to show how little damage was done by three 12-inch Gathmann shells fired against one plate:

On May 31, 1898, a 12-inch shell, weighing 844 pounds and containing 284 pounds of wet gun cotton, was fired at a nickel-steel plate 10 inches thick and 8 feet long by 4 feet high. The shell struck the plate and exploded, whirling the plate around and dislodging it from its supports, but doing it no damage. Considerable unconsumed gun cotton was picked up near the plate, but apparently most of it exploded.

On June 10, 1898, another 12-inch shell, weighing 905 pounds and containing 299 pounds of wet gun cotton containing 30 per cent of moisture, was fired at the same plate. The shell exploded on impact, and while the plate was forced through the sand some 20 feet, it was but slightly injured—merely bulged on the back to a slight extent. Some unconsumed gun cotton was picked up near the plate, but not as much as in the preceding experiment.

On June 16, 1898, another 12-inch shell, weighing 900 pounds and containing 248 pounds of wet gun cotton (30 per cent moisture), was fired at the same plate, but owing to a premature explosion of the detonator the shell was not exploded. It struck the plate, however, and knocked it down.

It will be seen that while this plate was struck three times by heavy 12-inch shells, containing large charges of wet gun cotton, two of which exploded on impact, it was not injured aside from the slight bulge referred to. It is positively certain that an ordinary armor-piercing shell without any bursting charge or a semiarmor-piercing shell containing gunpowder would have wrought greater destruction to this plate than did the gun-cotton shells.

On September 23, 1898, at Sandy Hook, a 12-inch shell of the same type as those used in the three foregoing experiments, weighing 945 pounds and containing 210 pounds of gun cotton completely saturated, was fired at this same plate, which was supported by an oak frame, heavily backed with sand. This plate, which had already been struck and slightly bulged, as previously described, was struck by the shell, which exploded on impact, breaking the plate in two pieces through the point of impact and the depression just mentioned, and an examination of the fracture revealed an old crack through the depression, extending beyond its edges. An ordinary uncharged 12-inch shell would, beyond doubt, have smashed this plate as effectively as did the gun-cotton shell.

On December 2, 1898—

Bringing these experiments up to the beginning of this session of Congress—

On December 2, 1898, the first of the new type of Gathmann shells, tapering at the front end, was tested in a 12-inch gun at Sandy Hook. It weighed 744 pounds and contained but 116 pounds of wet gun cotton. It was fired against a 19-inch nickel-steel plate and exploded on impact, breaking the plate in two pieces, both of which were thrown considerable distance, and the target structure was demolished. This was a very successful shot, but an ordinary 12-inch shell would have wrecked the plate, but would not have made as much havoc, probably, with the sand and oak backing.

Here is the only experiment of all the experiments which were made which amounted to anything whatever.

Another trial was that of a 12-inch mortar shell weighing 1,000 pounds and containing 49 pounds of wet gun cotton. This shell was fired against a 41-inch nickel-steel plate and perforated it, as might be expected; but the shell failed to explode and was recovered whole in rear of the target, the fuse having been blown off.

Two more of the new shells were fired to show that they would explode on striking the water. One failed entirely, and the other exploded, not on first impact, but on ricochet.

These instances are cited as being among the most important of the many experiments made, and it will be seen that they were attended with but limited success, except in one particular, namely, there were no accidents due to premature explosion in the gun.

And that was all the success they did have.

It may be thought that in citing the foregoing experiments those have been selected which are unfavorable in character to the exclusion of others more favorable, but such is not the case. They are selected as being the most interesting and important.

Mr. President, it seems to me, under these circumstances, that we are not justified in having Gathmann guns in every bill that goes through Congress, and that the $250,000 appropriated in the naval appropriation bill yesterday to carry on these experiments is a liberal allowance to an uncertain scheme, as this is denominated by the Chief of Ordnance of the Navy Department.

These experiments were carried on up into December last, and there is nothing before the body at present to show that anything has occurred since that time to justify us in buying experimental Gathmann guns in two different acts of Congress. Therefore I move to strike out the provision for the purchase of those guns.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will not prevail. Yesterday he opposed the amendment to the naval appropriation bill for the purchase, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, of two Gathmann guns because there was an appropriation of $65,000 in the fortifications bill for one Gathmann gun, and the Senator did not object to the appropriation in the fortifications bill. He signified no intention to move to strike it out, but he gave this appropriation as a reason why the appropriation of yesterday should not be made. To-day—

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say right now—

Mr. CHANDLER. To-day he says that this appropriation should not be made because the appropriation of yesterday was made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the appropriation of yesterday had not been made, I would not now move to strike this out. I am willing to experiment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very good. The Senator has made my point. This appropriation in the pending bill, if passed by the Senate, is made beyond any contingency. The other amendment attacked by the Senator from South Dakota and by the Senator from Georgia, who went over the same ground traversed by the Senator from South Dakota, has gone into conference, and we have no means of predicting whether it will be adopted or whether it will not be adopted.

I am in favor of the appropriation in the pending bill. I hope it will not be stricken out. I desire that it shall not be stricken out independent of the question what may become of the amendment which was made to the naval appropriation bill.

I will not follow the Senator in his recital of the last experiments to which he refers as to the effect of the explosion of gun cotton against armor plate. That gun cotton exploding under those circumstances will not produce as great havoc as the explosion of an equal number of pounds of ordinary gunpowder, I can not believe; but it is not a question as to what will be the effect of one explosive as against another explosive when it strikes a plane. The question is as to the Gathmann invention, which is designed to produce safety in firing high explosives from ordinary cannon by the use of gunpowder.

There may be a difference of opinion as to whether the Gathmann invention has passed the experimental stage. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] yesterday argued that it had absolutely passed the experimental stage. Captain O'Neil, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, contends that it has not passed the experimental stage. Both the inventor and the Senator from Ohio, on the one hand, and Captain O'Neil and his associates on the other, are honest in their opinions.

It is a question of judgment merely as to whether the invention has or has not passed the experimental stage. I stand occupying a medium position from the investigation which I have made of this subject. I saw certain experiments with a Gathmann shell at Sandy Hook in September last. The Gathmann shell is designed to accomplish the highly important object of firing dynamite or gun cotton or other high explosives with ordinary gunpowder from a modern cannon. This attempt is exceedingly important, because if it can be done it will revolutionize naval and military warfare.

In my judgment the Gathmann shell has so far passed the experimental stage that it is not only expedient for the War Department to buy one gun, but it is also expedient for the Navy Department to buy two guns and place them upon one of its harbor-defense vessels. That is the only proposition before Congress—the proposition for the one gun for the War Department in this bill, the proposition for the two guns for the Navy Department upon a harbor-defense vessel, which is in the naval bill and has gone into conference.

Mr. President, I am confident that to the extent of this expenditure for the one gun for the Army and for the two guns for the Navy, whether you call the guns experimental or whether you contend that they are past the experimental stage, the appropriations ought to be made, and above all there should be made this appropriation, which can be made certain by the rejection of the motion of the Senator from South Dakota and the passage of this bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

I am surprised at the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, because, if he intended to make this motion to-day, he ought to have given notice yesterday not only that he would oppose the amendment then proposed by the Senator from Ohio, but that when the fortifications bill would come up he would move to strike out the clause. Why did not the Senator say then that the proposition in this bill, which he gave as a reason for defeating the amendment to the naval bill, he would attack when it came up in the Senate to-day? I think, in all fairness, he should have given that notice, and, not having given that notice, I think now he ought to let the matter go without moving to strike out the very gun which he made a part of his action against the amendment yesterday.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the only real argument the Senator from New Hampshire has made hardly needs answering; that is, that I ought to have given notice yesterday of what I would do to-day with regard to a bill which was not being considered yesterday.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not yielded the floor to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will be very glad to yield after I get through.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator yield to me right now?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Not now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Just a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I decline to yield. It is not experimenting with this gun to which I object, but I object to too much experimenting with it. It seems to me if one branch of the Government experiments with this gun it ought to be sufficient until it has passed the experimental stage, and then we would not need further experiments. I doubt the value of ascertaining whether or not we can fire gun cotton if we have so fixed the gun cotton before we fire it that it will not explode.

The experiments show that the gun cotton is saturated with water, and it appears that when the shell struck the target in two instances a considerable quantity of gun cotton was picked up that did not explode. You might just as well shoot clay in these guns as gun cotton which will not explode. That is one of the reasons why I say this is experimental.

If they have fixed the gun cotton so that it will not go off when it hits the target or an enemy's ship, it is no better than so much corn meal, and therefore the experiment is valueless. If the targets were in every instance, as the Ordnance Department show, no more injured than they would have been with a solid shot with an ordinary shell using gunpowder, then it certainly is an experiment. The mere fact that you can fire from one of our high-class rifled cannon gun cotton that will not explode is, as a piece of knowledge, absolutely valueless to the Government.

If we were going to buy one of these guns, I would not object. I did not object yesterday to buying one of these guns and testing it, but up to the 2d of December these guns have been found to be a failure, and have been pronounced a failure by the Ordnance Department; and they give in detail the experiments. They show what they have done, and they have accomplished nothing. They fired gun cotton that would not explode when it got to the mark, and they fired it without exploding the gun from which it was fired.

Very remarkable, is it not, Mr. President, that they could fire gun cotton that would not explode when it reached the target and not burst the gun out of which it was fired? You could have done as much with so much clay or corn meal. The clay or corn meal would not have exploded when it hit the target and neither would it have burst the gun from which it came.

Therefore it seems to me that this is in the experimental stage, and I object to the purchase of too many guns, at least until you have passed the experimental stage, and that is all there is to it. If yesterday we had not adopted the amendment appropriating $250,000 for this purpose, I should have been willing that this clause should remain in the bill and that the Government should make the further experiment and see if we can not get a gun that will fire gun cotton which will explode. They have a gun now, it appears, which will fire gun cotton that will not explode. I do not know whether that is of value to anybody or not. I think not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Inasmuch as the Senator from South Dakota concedes that he is willing that this gun shall be purchased, that ends the argument, and I hope he will withdraw his amendment in accordance with his declaration.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this subject again. I have not made a statement with reference to this projectile and gun that can not be proved by the best expert testimony in the Army and by a number of prominent experts in the Navy. The argument the Senator from South Dakota has made goes to show conclusively that he does not know what he is talking about. Therefore I will pass that part of it.

But in reference to the status of this legislation I wish to say a word. The amendment which was offered to the naval appropriation bill provided for the equipment of two monitors with Gathmann guns, instead of the other guns usually furnished—12-inch guns—at an additional cost of about $5,000. From the report of Captain O'Neil, which is the only evidence offered in both these cases, it is quite evident that if he can prevent the use of any Gathmann gun in naval construction or equipment he will do so.

Therefore, when I amended my amendment by making it discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy as to whether or not he would use these guns on the monitors, we left it entirely in the hands of the Navy Department; and if it is referred to this expert O'Neil he will condemn it, and there will not be one of them put on a ship. The Secretary of War, who has reports in his hands made by Major Heath under the direction of the War Department, has recommended the making of an appropriation for this gun, to be placed at Sandy Hook. If I had known that this discussion was to come up again to-day, I would have fortified myself with the evidence and the testimony, for I am prepared, as I stated, to prove by officers who made the experiments every statement I have made.

In view of the fact that I admitted the amendment to the amendment, which makes it conditional with the Navy Department whether or not this gun shall be adopted by the Navy (and I think it extremely doubtful whether it will be), I insist on this amendment and accept the Senator's idea that we ought to have one. The amendment on the naval bill has not been concurred in by the House or by the committee, but has been sent to conference, and is in conference to-day. If the conference committee should report adversely, then there would be no provision for a Gathmann gun.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, about the only information I gain from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] is that I know nothing about this subject. That he has vast knowledge on the subject is evidenced by the speech which he has just made. In contradistinction to the experiments of the Navy Department, the results of which I have read, we have his bare assertion, unsupported, that he knows all about it. That ought to be convincing and satisfactory to the Senate. It certainly must be.

We have a gun for firing gun cotton. Sampson fired earthquakes at Morro Castle during the six weeks' siege of Santiago. He destroyed Morro Castle every morning; and when it was finally captured, it was found that none of the old smoothbore guns built in 1688 had been harmed at all or the castle injured. The range is so short with the Vesuvius that although they can throw gun cotton—and he threw considerable of it—it appears that it was so fixed that it would not explode or else it did not reach Morro Castle. We did not harm it a particle, and there were no modern guns there to prevent them from getting close to it, and Sampson, who does not appear to be a brave man, stayed so far from Morro Castle and these ancient smoothbores that he could not see with the powerful field glasses he had on his vessel whether he hit it or not.

Now, it appears that up to December 2—here are the detailed reports of the experiments—this gun was a total failure. Yet it is said that the Senator from Ohio knows all about the subject and no one else knows anything about it. Here is the report of the Chief of the Ordnance Department, as I say, giving the detailed experiments. We spent $50,000 in 1897, and very much more in 1898, and carried the experiments to the 2d of December. The results are given in detail; and the only answer to all this is that the Senator from Ohio knows all about it and that other people know nothing about it. I do not care to discuss the question further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word in reference to the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] a short time ago, when I contrasted the price of 23 cents a pound for steel for the high-power guns with the price of 27 cents a pound for armor to be made according to the Krupp process. I repeat that it is impossible for me to believe that the price as proposed for armor is not very excessive if the steel for the guns can be produced for 22 cents a pound.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has warned us that the action of the Senate yesterday may tend to cripple the construction of the new Navy, and he has stated that he is afraid that while we are making ample provision for the Army, to send our soldiers to far distant regions, we are neglecting to make proper provision for the Navy.

Upon that point I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that we have approaching completion eight battle ships; and if by our amendments yesterday to the naval bill we delay until next winter the construction of any more battle ships, or if we delay for a longer period the construction of any more battle ships, we shall still have eight first-class battle ships. We should be in no haste in providing for additional battle ships, with the payment to the combined armor manufacturers of the country of $545 a ton for armor.

It is true that if the amendment which was agreed to by the Senate were to be adopted by the conference committee and by the two Houses exactly as it has passed, it would prevent contracts for the armor for the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio. To-day the Secretary of the Navy has authority to contract for that armor at $400 a ton. If before he makes the contracts we pass the amendment which we adopted yesterday, he can not make a contract for the armor for more than $300 a ton.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. CHANDLER. One moment. He can not contract for more than $300 a ton. I should like to have the Senator from Maryland tell me, if he can, why it is, if we need to make haste now to pay 27 cents a pound for armor for ships to be authorized by the pending bill, the Secretary of the Navy has allowed nearly one year to go by without making contracts at $400 a ton for the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, when the armor manufacturers tell us in a communication which was submitted to the Senate that they can make more profit on Harvey armor at $400 a ton than on Krupp armor at $545 a ton?

Does the Senator from Maryland, who is on the naval subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, know why it is, if there should be so much haste in paying this enormous price for armor, that the Secretary of the Navy has made the contracts for the hulls of the Maine, Missouri, and Ohio, and has made no contract up to the present time for the armor for those ships? Does the Senator know?

Mr. GORMAN. Of course, I do not know except from the general statements that come to us that the Secretary of the Navy, after an examination of the question, believed there had been such an improvement in the manufacture of armor as compared with the Harvey process that he desired to wait and have the new ships constructed with armor under the new process, which would cost more money. I understand that is his idea. Whether that be right or not I do not know.

In addition, I think that as the keel of the Maine has only been laid within the last few days they hold that this delay has not retarded the completion of the ships; but what I said was that, in my judgment, if the naval appropriation bill were to become a law with the amendments that were adopted in the Senate it would prevent the completion of any of the vessels that were ordered at the last session of Congress or any that are contemplated by that bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. What the Senator says is important; it is ex cathedra; he is on the conference committee which is now considering this very amendment of the Senate of yesterday. I will ask him why it will prevent the completion of the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio? The Senator does not make it clear.

Mr. GORMAN. I tried to make it clear. We attempted once before to restrict the price of armor and did by law fix the price per ton to be paid by the Navy Department at $300 a ton. It was found that it was impossible to procure the armor at that price; and three large vessels were on the stocks, the frames all completed, and waiting a year for their armor. You will have claims presented to Congress, if they have not already been presented, for the damages to the shipbuilders.

In my judgment, it is as impossible to-day to procure armor that is to go on these vessels at $300 a ton as it was a year ago, when this delay occurred. I merely express my opinion about the matter. I believed then, as I believe now, that if you intended to adjust this matter of the cost of armor by building a plant, it was useless to order the construction of ships until you had that plant completed, which it will take from one to two years to construct.

Owing to the very serious, as I think, conditions, which I have had no part in bringing about, which have been brought about by the action of the Executive and by this body—conditions which I regret more than I can express—I think it is unwise to stop at this critical moment and talk about the cost of $300 or $400 a ton for this armor. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not intend to discuss with the Senator the propriety of the $300 price as to ships that are contained in the pending naval appropriation bill, but why the Senator should say that the Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio can not be completed when the Secretary could have made the contracts at any time within the last ten months at $400 a ton, I do not understand. I do not understand why the Secretary has not made the contracts. I think the Department has not been justified in delaying the armor contracts on those three ships.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator from Maryland if he can state authoritatively that there is no clause in the contracts for those three vessels which protects the Government against any claim for delay. I know that when Secretary Herbert appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs he presented us with the blank form, or rather he brought the contracts themselves which had been entered into for the three previous battle ships, and there is in those contracts a clause expressly providing that the Government does not hold itself responsible for any delays in regard to armor, but that the contractor can finish the vessel as specified up to the point when the armor must go on, and no harm can come to the Government by reason of any delay.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true. There was such a general clause in that contract, as there is in all of them; but I say to the Senator, who has had great experience in this matter heretofore, that that contract must be construed fairly and it was intended for this only, that if there was a fault on the part of the contractor to furnish promptly and in time under his contract the armor to go on the vessel the builder of the hull would have had no claim on the Government, but when the Government deliberately and in pursuance of the law fails to enter into a contract at all and keeps the yards occupied by the hull of a ship and takes no action whatever to give to the constructor the armor, he comes here with a claim which, if it were a private claim, an honest man could not reject, and I do not believe that Congress can reject it in the end.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Senator attended the launching of any of the battle ships?

Mr. GORMAN. I have not done so recently.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, it has been my good luck to attend to both at the Cramp yards, and I will inform him that the battle ship kisses the water with not a particle of armor on it; that the superstructure is added afterwards and bolted to the framework; that there can be no just or proper claim, no fair claim, against the Government for any delay in completing the contract, so far as the ship and its hull is concerned, and that the addition of the armor afterwards is provided for in these contracts to protect the Government against any claim for damages on account of delay. It would be, in my judgment, a very unfair interpretation of that clause to say that if we willfully and designedly delayed furnishing the armor because we were trying to hold this trust up and make it loosen its grasp on our throats and give us armor at a fair price, we were necessarily compelled to pay the contractors because of that delay.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a question has been raised here as to the action of the Secretary of the Navy in delaying contracts for armor plate on some of the ships now building. I was not present yesterday in the Senate, and I have had no conversation with the Secretary in regard to that point, but as I understand it, before those contracts were made it appeared that there had been an armor developed much superior to the armor we are now using, one which would afford the same power of resistance with 25 per cent less weight and a corresponding reduction in the ultimate cost, although as a whole a somewhat more expensive armor. The Secretary very properly, as I believe, withheld all contracts in view of this improvement in armor. It was the wise and right thing to do.

Mr. President, as I was unavoidable absent yesterday, and as this debate has come up, I wish to say what I should like to have said then, although I know how vain it is. The reduction of the contract price for armor to $300 before we have built a Government armor plant means the stoppage of work on ships now building, and will stop the building of the ships in future.

Without any reference to the Philippines or any other acquisitions of the war, the defense of the United States rests in our Navy more than in anything else. We have proved it in the last war. We have proved that we could not buy ships in a moment; and yet the Senate has gone to work and stricken out some of the ships that the House authorizes, and, worst of all, it has reduced the number of sailors by 3,000, so that twelve vessels at least will have to go out of commission. Think of putting ships out of commission deliberately at such a time as this.

We have passed bills appropriating millions of dollars to build public buildings up and down this country, every one of which could wait. We have put millions of dollars into rivers and harbors, seven-eighths of which at least could wait, and having done this, we have now selected as a subject for economy the Navy of the United States, the great arm of national defense. Post-offices we are to have, and dredging, but we are to cut off ships of war.

Although, Mr. President, I know it is vain to say anything about it, I wish at least to enter my protest against a policy like this, which it seems to me the war has taught us in the strongest way is the most mistaken, the dearest policy that could possibly be engaged in by a great nation. What we may save in one or two years in armor plate is trivial. What we might lose if we should have trouble with any great nation to-morrow is enormous.

The Cramps to-day, if I am not misinformed, are paying $575 a ton for this armor to put on the Russian battle ships. England is paying £117 per ton to put on their battle ships this new and improved armor. If we leave it at $400 we force the Secretary of the Navy to put an inferior and heavier armor on the ships. If we put it at $300 we stop shipbuilding altogether.

I am no lover of the makers of armor in this country or their pool. I have no love for the man among them who sold fraudulent armor plates to the Government in the past—an infamous transaction. I should be the last to wish to do anything that would help or profit such a concern as that.

But, Mr. President, we have no armor plant of our own, and until we have an armor plant, which, I believe, conditions are showing that we must build if we are to be masters of the situation, I agree with the Senator from Maryland that we are making the greatest possible mistake, not only in the way we have reduced the price of armor, but in the way the Senate has cut down the authorization of ships and men.

I read with the greatest regret of the action of the Senate, and I for one hope the House will stand firm in its contest for all that it originally put in the bill. I think it is much better that we should face an extra session than that we should allow the Navy of the United States to receive such a blow as it seems to me is aimed at it by these amendments.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12203) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I ask that it be printed and give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take it up the first thing in the morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7865) to pay the J. S. Stearns Lumber Company $379, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LOVE.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the Senate that the hour of 9.30 this evening has been agreed upon to set aside the public business for eulogies on the Hon. WILLIAM FRANKLIN LOVE, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Mississippi.

OUTAGE OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. VEST. I rise to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10253) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes. I do this at the instance of the acting chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. ALLISON], who is detained in the Appropriations Committee. The bill comes by unanimous report from the Committee on Finance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it must be passed this evening in order to become a law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I understand the bill will take no time.

Mr. VEST. I hope not. I do not see why it should.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate act on the fortifications bill or not before this bill is taken up?

Mr. PERKINS. The fortifications bill is now in the Senate, having been passed upon by the Committee of the Whole. I suggest that it be placed upon its passage first.

Mr. TILLMAN. We can not allow that after the speeches which have just been uttered without some opportunity to present the other side of that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must put before the Senate the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But the Senator withholds his motion.

Mr. HOAR. I withhold the motion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to say in regard to the bill for which the Senator from Missouri asks consideration that it has received the unanimous consideration of the Finance Committee. There are amendments upon it. If the bill is to have any chance for passage, the amendments ought to be considered and the bill passed to-night, and I hope the Senate will consent to consider it now. I do not think there will be any discussion on it.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. I will withhold my motion with the understanding that I shall be recognized after the bill has been passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will be read for information. The bill called up by the Senator from Missouri will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 10253) to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as section 1:

That under the conditions imposed by section 50 of the act of August 28, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the support of the Government, and for other purposes," allowance for loss shall be made as to all distilled spirits produced and entered for deposit prior to January 1, 1899, and which lawfully remain in any internal-revenue bonded warehouse, after the expiration of the period of forty-eight months: Provided, however, That the allowance for loss herein authorized shall not exceed 9½ gallons for forty-nine, fifty, fifty-one, and fifty-two months; 10 gallons for fifty-three, fifty-four, fifty-five, and fifty-six months; 10½ gallons for fifty-seven, fifty-eight, fifty-nine, and sixty months; 11 gallons for sixty-one, sixty-two, sixty-three, and sixty-four months; 11½ gallons for sixty-five, sixty-six, sixty-seven, and sixty-eight months; 12 gallons for sixty-nine, seventy, seventy-one, and seventy-two months; 12½ gallons for seventy-three, seventy-four, seventy-five, and seventy-six months; 13 gallons for seventy-seven, seventy-eight, seventy-nine, and eighty months; and 13½ gallons for eighty-one, eighty-two, eighty-three, and eighty-four months.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VEST. There are additional amendments which the Committee on Finance recommend which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The additional amendments will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 14, line 3, after the word "conditions," insert "and limitations;" in line 8, after the word "and," strike out the word "entered" and insert "originally gauged;" in line 11, after the word "months," insert "from the date of original gauge;" and in line 25, after the word "months," insert "and no further allowance shall be made;" so as to make the section read:

That under the conditions and limitations imposed by section 50 of the act of August 28, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the support of the Government, and for other purposes," allowance for loss shall be made as to all distilled spirits produced and originally gauged for deposit prior to January 1, 1899, and which lawfully remain in any internal-revenue bonded warehouse, after the expiration of the period of forty-eight months from the date of original gauge.

Provided, however, That the allowance for loss herein authorized shall not exceed 9½ gallons for forty-nine, fifty, fifty-one, and fifty-two months; 10 gallons for fifty-three, fifty-four, fifty-five, and fifty-six months; 10½ gallons for fifty-seven, fifty-eight, fifty-nine, and sixty months; 11 gallons for sixty-one, sixty-two, sixty-three, and sixty-four months; 11½ gallons for sixty-five, sixty-six, sixty-seven, and sixty-eight months; 12 gallons for sixty-nine, seventy, seventy-one, and seventy-two months; 12½ gallons for seventy-three, seventy-four, seventy-five, and seventy-six months; 13 gallons for seventy-seven, seventy-eight, seventy-nine, and eighty months; and 13½ gallons for eighty-one, eighty-two, eighty-three, and eighty-four months, and no further allowance shall be made.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Has the entire amendment been read?

Mr. LINDSAY. The second section has not been read yet.

The Secretary read the next amendment of the Committee on Finance, which was to insert the following as section 2:

SEC. 2. That the allowance for loss herein provided shall be ascertained by regauge on request of distiller before the expiration of eighty-four months from date of original gauge, and shall apply to spirits remaining in any internal-revenue bonded warehouse which shall have been regauged heretofore under the provisions of section 50 of the said act of August 28, 1894.

Mr. LINDSAY. To meet the difficulty that arises out of the delay during the time the bill was on the Calendar, I offer a proviso which has been submitted to the Committee on Finance and approved, giving two months additional time in which to make the request as to certain whiskies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend by adding to section 2 the following:

Provided, That for the regauge of spirits originally gauged for deposit on or before the 1st day of March, 1892, the request of the distiller for a regauge, under the provisions of this act, may be made at any time before the 1st day of May, 1899.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I understand, the bill provides for allowing for the shrinkage of whiskies in bonded warehouses.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand that it ranges from 6 or 8 gallons to 12 or 13 gallons in the barrel.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What effect will the passage of the bill have upon the revenue?

Mr. LINDSAY. There is a letter here from the Secretary of the Treasury in which he says it will have no material effect upon the quantity of revenue collected, but will very much aid in the collection of the revenue by obviating a difficulty which he states, owing to the loss after the fourth year of 1½ gallons each year, so that the older the whisky becomes the less valuable it is. The whole matter has been considered by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether this shrinkage is allowed now?

Mr. LINDSAY. The shrinkage is allowed for four years, which is 9 gallons, and then the extent of the shrinkage for three years more will make it 13½ gallons altogether.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As I understand it, we collect $1.10 a gallon upon the whisky.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And if it should remain in bond eight years, under this bill we should lose $4.40 on each barrel; that is, 9 gallons is allowed for shrinkage in four years, and if it is kept in nine years, we lose 13 gallons, which would be 4 more.

Mr. LINDSAY. I will simply ask to have the letter from the Treasury Department read.

Mr. HOAR. This bill was taken up with the understanding that it would create no debate, and I must renew my motion for an executive session if the debate is to go on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator will allow the fortifications bill to be first passed. It has not yet been passed.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his motion until the letter from the Treasury Department can be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I will not press the motion if the letter referred to is brief; but can it not be printed in the RECORD without reading?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the letter be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. LINDSAY. I send the letter to the Secretary's desk.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated February 20, 1899, but was interrupted by Mr. HOAR. I made the request that that letter be printed in the RECORD without reading. What became of that request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear it.

Mr. HOAR. I made that request, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that the letter be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1899.

SIR: The act of August 23, 1894, extended the bonded period of distilled spirits from three to eight years, but extended the outage period only from three to four years.

The whisky (the term used to designate the finer grade of distilled spirits) is stored in the bonded warehouses in barrels, and while its quality slowly improves with age its quantity constantly diminishes.

The purpose of the act extending the bonded period from three to eight years was manifestly to give the time necessary for the whisky to age or ripen, but the practical and successful operation of the act has been greatly interfered with by the limiting of the outage period to four years; this limit operates to raise the rate of tax after the expiration of the four years, and the specific tax of $1.10 per proof gallon is thus converted into more or less of an ad valorem tax. The laws heretofore enacted imposing tax upon distilled spirits has from the beginning been specific in its character, and it is not to be inferred from any of the laws on this subject that it was ever the intention of the Congress to make the tax partake in the slightest degree of an ad valorem tax.

Taking the loss after the fourth year to be 1½ gallons, the tax is, by the present law, in effect raised 5 cents per proof gallon each year, and is therefore instead of a uniform tax of $1.10 per proof gallon $1.15 at the end of the fifth year; $1.20 at the end of the sixth year; $1.25 at the end of the seventh year, and $1.30 at the end of the eighth year, and in like proportion for any fraction of the year. In practical business operations the dealer must distribute the tax upon the lost whisky or outage upon the remaining contents of the package.

It is this discrimination against the older and finer grades of whisky which the pending outage bill will remove, and unless this discrimination is removed the constant tendency will be to the use of younger and cheaper grades until the older and finer grades disappear from the market in any commercial quantity. This is shown by the falling off in the production of the finer grades in the last three years.

The ripening of the whisky is a slow process and proceeds in almost imperceptible degrees, while the increase of the tax in the practical operation of the existing law is a perceptible quantity; and experience proves that the whisky begins to fall in market value after the fourth year, and is, in fact, unfavorably affected as it begins to approach this period.

The revenue from distilled spirits is not involved in this question to any appreciable extent. The history of the various laws imposing tax on distilled spirits and the text of the existing law exclude the idea that the outage provision was intended to produce revenue; that provision, together with all other similar details, were intended to add to the security and to contribute finally to the collection of the tax.

The collection of the tax upon the outage was originally intended to prevent fraud, and in the necessarily crude condition of the revenue service so soon after its establishment, this and other similar precautions were justifiable, but in the present effective condition of the service no fear of fraud need be entertained, and the reason for the imposition of the tax upon the outage entirely disappears. This opinion is fully sustained by the results following the act of 1890, which made allowance for loss during the then existing bonded period.

The revenue received by the Government from the tax upon distilled spirits depends upon the consumptive requirements of the country; there is a demand annually for so many gallons, and no more revenue can be obtained than this consumptive demand will yield. A larger sum could be collected, as a matter of course, from a higher than a lower rate, provided the higher rate did not lessen the consumptive demand or increase the production of illicit spirits. Experience shows that both these results might reasonably be expected.

But the amount of revenue received annually will not be reliably nor permanently increased by a tax which discriminates in favor of one grade of whisky against another. The result of this discrimination is not to increase the revenue, but simply to increase the consumption of the grade which pays the lower rate of tax and to decrease the consumption of the grade paying the higher rates.

This result does not rest on theory only, but is proved by actual figures in the markets of the country. I am reliably informed that whisky three years old brings a higher price in bond than the same brand six or even seven years old; thus the whole experience of the trade has, by the operation of existing law, been reversed. The owner of the whisky may have been reluctant for a time to admit that the laws of trade, within his own experiences, would thus be reversed, and may therefore have held on for a better price, to find himself finally forced to accept a still lower price, or pay the taxes at the end of the bonded period, and receive into his store whisky which he could sell only at a heavy loss in competition with whisky younger in age and inferior in quality, but which meets the general demand.

The administration and the enforcement of the revenue laws proceed with less difficulty and with much more general satisfaction and regularity when the business subject to taxation is reasonably profitable and free from unnecessary interference or hardships.

Respectfully, yours,

N. B. SCOTT,
Commissioner.

HON. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
United States Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am not satisfied of the wisdom of this measure. I have no information as to the amount of whisky now in bond. I understand that this bill applies only to that which is now on hand, but that information has not been furnished the Senate. Here we are within a few hours of the close of the session, and we are expending money by the hundreds of millions, and collecting it per capita from the people of this country, and now while we need all these revenues we propose to relieve a class of whisky distillers. That seems to be the proposition presented to the Senate. It does not seem to me that it is the thing to do.

This bill ought to have come in at the proper time, so as to have been fairly discussed and fully considered. I do not think anyone understands the effect of it and how much revenue we shall lose by it. For my own part, I am not willing to legislate at this hour of the session in favor of this particular class, in view of the fact that the money collected to pay these enormous expenditures must be levied upon the people of this country per capita.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question. Will the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. The whisky in bond, if I understand this bill—and I listened to the reading of it—will not pay taxes until it is taken out, and the shrinkage or loss by evaporation, for which the allowance is made, will be a loss to the Government?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. And at the same time the balance of the liquor will improve by age, and therefore rise in price. So this is simply a proposition which looks to increasing the value of this whisky for the benefit of distillers and letting the Government wait for its revenue.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Undoubtedly, and I object to the present consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FORAKER. Before that motion is put, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the executive session I shall move to go into legislative session again for a few moments that I may present resolutions relative to the death of Hon. STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Ohio.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF HON. STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions which were adopted by the House of Representatives upon the death of STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY, late a Representative from the State of Ohio, be now laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In accordance with the request, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 18, 1899.

The House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow that the Hon. STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY, a Representative from the Nineteenth

Congressional district of the State of Ohio, died at his home in Jefferson, Ohio, on September 8, 1898; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Ordered, That the Clerk communicate the resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep and profound sorrow of the death of Hon. STEPHEN NORTHWAY, late a Representative from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his eminent public services and high personal character.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY very closely confined himself to his own particular duties and walks in life. On that account he was seldom seen in this Chamber, and was not well known to many members of this body. His service was in the House of Representatives, and there, when that body was in session, he was always to be found. To his fellow-members he was thoroughly known and appreciated, and they have borne testimony to the fidelity and efficiency of his services among them, and in glowing eulogies have spread upon the record their estimate of his lofty character and noble qualities as a man and citizen. In view of their tributes, it is not necessary that I should speak at length of his career and virtues.

But in moving the adoption of these resolutions it is fit and proper that I should say that Ohio has always been fortunate in the character of men who have represented her in the halls of Congress. Almost without exception they have been self-made men, and to an unusual number they have been men of commanding ability, who have impressed themselves on the whole nation.

STEPHEN A. NORTHWAY, while not so distinguished as many others, was yet a most worthy member of these delegations. He fell short of the highest distinction only for lack of opportunity. His services in the House of Representatives covered only two terms and a part of a third. He had the character, the zeal, the industry, and the intellectual endowment that warranted the opinion that had his life been spared he would have made for himself a great name.

He had the self-reliance that comes from self-help; the hard, common sense that comes from contact with the people; the direct, straightforward methods of those who live and fight in the open; the generosity of impulse and the tenderness of heart of those who know the sorrows and weaknesses of mankind. He had a mind that was analytical and logical, a copious vocabulary, and great fluency of speech. He was a hard student, a close reasoner, and an active participator in public affairs.

United with a high order of ability, he had a commanding figure—tall, erect—and a most affable and pleasing manner and address. In his intercourse with others, and particularly when addressing popular assemblages, he seemed to forget himself entirely, and to have no thought except only to interest and instruct his hearers, and, on controverted propositions, to carry them with him by reason and force of argument.

He had a fine vein of humor, that cropped out naturally, almost unconsciously, in his speech, and he freely employed anecdotes for illustration; but he never sacrificed dignity nor fell below the high plane of sincerity and patriotic purpose.

He was a frank, manly man, who always had convictions and the courage of them. He was never marked "doubtful" in any canvass made to determine beforehand the fate of a pending proposition. He was always squarely on one side or the other, and whichever it might be had in him a fearless and able champion. And so it was that in person, mind, and character he was a rare man, and a worthy successor in the representation of his district of Elisha Whittlesey, Joshua R. Giddings, and James A. Garfield. No higher eulogy can be spoken.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions which have been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Ohio.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. FORAKER. I now move, in honor of the memory of Mr. NORTHWAY, that we take a recess until quarter after 8 o'clock, instead of an adjournment, as is usual. I am compelled to make that innovation upon the custom out of regard for the great pressure of public business in the closing hours of the session and the circumstances generally by which we are attended.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8.15 o'clock p. m.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LINDSAY. I believe the outage bill is before the Senate for consideration. I shall not object to letting it lie over temporarily, so that the Senator from New Hampshire may go on with his bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall not object if it is considered the business before the Senate.

Mr. LINDSAY. How is that?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the fortifications bill is considered the business before the Senate, I shall not object; and any other bill can be taken up that the Senator desires to have taken up.

Mr. LINDSAY. It is before the Senate already. It was when we went into executive session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the appropriation bill had better be considered the bill before the body, and then I will yield for the other bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not want to have the outage bill considered now, but I do not wish it to lose its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will pardon the Chair, the Chair is informed that unanimous consent was asked that the bill to which the Senator from Kentucky refers be taken up, and it was objected to by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. LINDSAY. No, sir. It was taken up and amended, and after it had been amended and the question was whether or not the bill should be reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, then the objection was made. At that stage the Senate went into executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it would go back to the Calendar, objection having been made, and it would require a motion to take it up again. The bill is on the Calendar, objection having been made. The executive session followed, leaving the bill on the Calendar, and the Senator from Kentucky would be obliged to move to take it up or ask unanimous consent that it be taken up in order to remove it from the Calendar.

Mr. LINDSAY. Of course, I yield to the Chair, but it seems to me that it would not lose its place by the Senate going into executive session.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will not object to my having the fortifications bill taken up. Then I will yield to him.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not want to prejudice my rights.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does not. I will yield to him for that purpose. The appropriation bill has preference, and I renew my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the fortifications bill be resumed. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12198) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire, who has in charge at present the fortifications bill, to yield to me in order that the bill to authorize the construction of a public building on the ground adjoining the Attorney-General's office may be laid before the Senate. I merely desire to have the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5130) to provide for the erection of a public building for the Department of Justice, which was, on page 2, after line 21, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. The limit of cost of said building is $1,000,000, and no plan therefor shall be accepted or construction entered upon that will involve an expenditure exceeding the limit of cost fixed herein.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. What change does the amendment make?

Mr. QUAY. It imposes a limit of $1,000,000 and is unobjectionable to the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. It makes no other change?

Mr. QUAY. No, sir.

The amendment was concurred in.

ANNIE M. CLEMENS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask my colleague to yield to me that I may make two reports on pension bills, which it is very important shall be passed. It will take but a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2550) granting a pension to Annie M. Clemens, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Annie M. Clemens, widow of George Clemens, late of Company H, Tenth United States Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM W. PATTERSON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11097) granting an increase of pension to William W. Patterson, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William W. Patterson, late of Company K, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and of First United States Engineers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. BRANSFORD, U. S. N.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5210) for the promotion and retirement of P. A. Surg. John F. Bransford, of the United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the President to appoint P. A. Surg. John F. Bransford a surgeon in the Navy of the United States and then place the name of said Bransford on the retired list thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POINT BARROW RELIEF EXPEDITION.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 229) recognizing the able and gallant services of Capt. Francis Tuttle, Revenue-Cutter Service, his officers and men of the Bear; also the heroic services of Lieut. David H. Jarvis, Ellsworth P. Bertholf, and Dr. Samuel J. Call, composing the overland expedition to Point Barrow, Arctic Ocean, for the relief of imperiled whalers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read at length for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, February 2, 1899.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill called up by the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think that is rather an extraordinary document, Mr. President. Usually in giving thanks, even to the greatest of men, a little simple, plain, straightforward English, without extravagant words, conveys the purpose of those who adopt the resolution. I am afraid I am speaking unkindly, but here is a sort of theatrical description, at great length, of the expedition. It is not in order. I have never known such a case.

There is nothing of the kind in the history of the war. When Grant in the Army was thanked, and when Farragut in the Navy was thanked, it was a simple vote of thanks. Such, I have no doubt, those men deserved; but I do not like the florid, swollen style of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will object until to-morrow at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

EXTENSION OF ANTI-CONTRACT LABOR LAWS TO HAWAII.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11247) to extend the anti-contract labor laws of the United States to Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?
